CANADIAN RIFLEMAN FINISHES THIRD IN KING'S PRIZE EVENT

Aircraftsman T. W. Gregory Tied for Runner-Up Position at Bisley, But Is Placed Third When Scores Are Broken Up—Captain Barlow Wins—Mrs. Hethey Shoots Well

BISLEY CAMP, England, July 16 (Reuter's).—By a comfortable margin Captain J. A. Barlow, of the West Yorkshire Regiment, England, won the King's Prize here today and was acclaimed victor in the Empire's premier event for military marksmen even while his ninety-nine rival finalists were still firing.

Barlow finished the long grind with an aggregate of 287 points out of a possible 300 for his second triumph in the classic. He was seven points ahead of a trio of sharp-shooters that included twenty-two-year-old Aircraftsman T. W. Gregory, of Ottawa, making his first trip to the Empire meeting of the National Rifle Association here.

This group was deadlocked at 280 and to break it up scores were checked and Sgt. E. M. Wade, of Oxford University, was given second place, the N.R.A.'s Badge and $250 in cash. Gregory placed third to win the badge and $125, and Major E. M. Ransford, of the Suffolf Regiment, was fourth, winning the badge and $100.

To break the tie, preference was given marksmen with best scores in Saturday's third stage, the entire placing being based on the aggregate scores in the second and third stages.

SEATTLE BOAT NAMED WINNER

Kittiwake Finishes Cruise With Lowest Error Count

The judges calculated Harvey's percentage of error was 1.2798.

Courses were plotted before the forty-six boats left Bremerton last night. Winners are determined according to accuracy of the plotted courses and closeness to the sailors' estimated arrival time.

OWNERS PROTEST

Almost immediately a protest meeting of the boat owners was held, but details were not immediately available. Judges said their placings as announced were subject to protest changes later tonight.

However, it was learned later that judges explained how percentage errors had been calculated all protests were withdrawn. The results were declared official.

I. F. Marshall's Vancouver-owned Jaro, from Burrard Yacht Club, was declared winner of Class "A" for boats under thirty-eight feet. Percentage of error was calculated at 1.6139 per cent. Second place in the class went to Comrade, sailed by C. H. Bolin, of Queen City Yacht Club, 2.0858 per cent error, and third to Sandpiper II, owned by M. S. Allyn, with 2.2443 per cent error.

Mary III, sailed by H. C. Peacock, of Queen City Club, won the class "B" event for boats over thirty-eight feet, with 2.1354 per cent error. Second place was Saranac, W. B. McDonald, of Olympia Yacht Club (2.337) and third was Lavarock, sailed by Ed Cunningham, of Seattle Yacht Club (2.7687).

Are Excavating An Ancient Fossil

GLASGOW, Mont., July 16 (AP).—The almost intact fossil skeleton of a large duckbill dinosaur, 50,000,000 years old and between thirty-six and forty feet long, is being excavated in the Fort Peck fossil fields by a University of Michigan expedition under the leadership of Dr. C. E. Case, curator of the university museum at Ann Arbor.

CONTRACTS ARE GIVEN

Dominion and Provincial Governments Settle Issue Of Disputed Bid

British Columbia signed on the dotted line with the Dominion Government yesterday for $660,000 worth of highway and mining trail development, to get under way immediately throughout the province. Premier Pattullo announced signature of agreements covering $300,000 to be spent on the first stages of the Blaine-New Westminster Highway; and $360,000 to be spent on mining trails, in joint programmes. Later, contracts for the first eight miles of the highway project were awarded.

Hon. F. M. MacPherson announced completion of conversations with Ottawa over the first two sections of the international highway, and the award of contracts to Dawson, Wade & Company, Ltd., and to W.C. Arnett & Company, Ltd., for the first two stages of the work.

CONTRACTS AWARDED

Dawson, Wade & Company, Ltd., will do the first section of this work, being the construction of 5.7 miles between the Pacific Highway (Yale Road) and McLennan Road, at a cost of $120,726. W. C. Arnett & Company, Ltd., will do the second stage, being 2.8 miles between Nicomekl River and McLennan Road, at a cost of $91,323.

"All tenders, together with that of Coast Quarries, Ltd., were submitted to Ottawa, with the recommendation by the Provincial Government that the two above tender be accepted. In view of the fact that the Coast Quarries' tender, at 3 per cent below the lowest other tender, was not a legal tender, as it did not contain either a unit or a lump price bid, our recommendation was accepted. Contract has accordingly been awarded to Dawson, Wade & Company, Ltd., and to W. C. Arnett & Company, Ltd., for the first two stages of the work," Mr. MacPherson said.

SPECIAL FORCE FOR PALESTINE

New Police Organization Is To Be Modelled After R.C.M.P. Plan

JERUSALEM, July 17 (CP-Reuter's).—A corps of "mounties" modelled on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be formed in Palestine to assist the present constabulary in the task of patrolling rural sections of the country.

This new rural mounted unit will consist of 800 Britons and Palestinians, and it is learned that recruiting will begin in England for ex-cavalrymen who wish to join.

The unit will be under the command of Lawrence Harrington, just promoted to the rank of superintendent, who himself was in the British cavalry before he came to Palestine in 1919.

These "Palestine Mounties" are being raised in accordance with a plan recommended by Sir Charles Tegart, the former Bengal police chief, who spent six months in the country advising on reorganization of the constabulary.

It was his plan to construct a barbed-wire barricade across the northern frontier of Palestine. The barricade is known as "Tegart's Ail."

STEAMER IS SEIZED

TACOMA, Wash., July 15 (AP).—The steamer Silverado was seized by Deputy United States Marshal Robert Forrest here today as the result of a $7,500 personal injury suit filed against it by John Connolly, who claims he was injured while working on the ship at Seattle, Wash.

Nothing More Interesting Than Fishing

While a crowd of several thousand persons watched one of the many fine events on the All-Sooke Day programme last Wednesday, with intense interest, two little boys were oblivious to all the excitement. They had noticed that there were small fish in a sluggish creek on Sooke River Flats, and with bent pins and pieces of string, they found fishing "more fun than anything."

HEPBURN'S WESTERN TRIP IS SEEN AS MOVE TO FORM NEW PARTY

Political Circles at Ottawa Believe Ontario Premier Working on Plan With Premier Duplessis to Bring New Federal Political Organization Into Being—Wants More Support

(Special to The Colonist)

OTTAWA, July 17.—The westward flying trip of Premier Hepburn of Ontario is believed in highly informed political circles in Ottawa to be a mission of Federal politics, a move designed by him and Premier Duplessis of Quebec to from a new poltical party in the Dominion arena. Close observers who have been watching carefully the anti-Mackenzie King attitude of the Ontario and Quebec Premiers are convinced they have decided the time is opportune to strike in the cause of a new set-up.

They believe that Premier Hepburn in secret conclave with Mr. Duplessis at Three Rivers last week, plus Premier Hepburn in secret conclave during the coming week with Federal Agriculture Minister Gardiner and Premier Patterson at Regina and Premier Pattullo at Victoria, all adds up to this move.

The latest development which incensed the Central Canada Provincial Premiers occurred at the last session of Parliament when President Roosevelt, after correspondence with Premier King, refused to allow hydro electric energy to be exported from the provinces into the United States. Mr. Hepburn is reported to have told his Ontario colleagues President Roosevelt and Premier King "shook hands and gave me the works."

Boys Arrested on Returning From a South Seas Cruise

SANTA CRUZ, Cal., July 16 (AP).—Admittedly "plenty tired of the sea," three Santa Cruz boys who "borrowed" a $25,000 yacht for a cruise to the South Seas, returned home on the vessel today and immediately were arrested on grand theft charges. Lew K. Foote, of Watsonville, owner of the fifty-two-foot ketch, the Tira, indicated he would leave the prosecution of the boys, if any, up to Santa Cruz authorities.

BRITAIN STARTS RURAL HOUSING

Fifty Thousand Homes to Be Built or Reconditioned in Next Five Years

LONDON, July 16 (AP).—Great Britain is starting a rural housing programme which envisages the building or reconditioning of 50,000 rural homes in the next five years.

It has the dual purpose of checking the drifting of families from the farms to the cities and of raising living standards among agricultural workers.

The new homes, built from funds provided by the Government and local authorities, will be rented to farm workers for an average of five shillings ($1.25) a week.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROGRAMME

Two new acts of Parliament authorized the programme as a supplement to the 1930 act, under which the Government has been carrying out a vast slum clearance project in the cities to prevent overcrowding and improve living conditions among the low-wage earners.

One of the new acts offers Government grants for new rural houses, the other grants for improving country cottages.

Through the Government contribution of about £250 ($1,250), spread over a long period of years for each house, and a similar contribution from local district councils, the Ministry of Health expects 30,000 new houses, costing about £500 each, to be built within five years. It is expected 20,000 homes would be reconditioned in the same period.

Says Helium Gas Found in Brazil

SAO PAULO, Brazil, July 16 (AP).—Annibal Bastos Aires, director of the Federal Geological Department, said today the presence of helium gas had been discovered by soundings in Sao Paulo State. He said his department had complete data on surveys seeking the non-inflammable gas, of which the United States has a virtual monopoly.

THANKSGIVING DAY FIXED

OTTAWA, July 16 (CP).—A proclamation fixing Thanksgiving Day for October 10, the second Monday in October, was published yesterday in The Canada Gazette.

VANCOUVER GIRL MOST BEAUTIFUL

Wins Award at Toronto—Attributes Beauty to Walking and Wholesome Food

TORONTO, July 16 (CP).—Dianne Perkins, of Vancouver, twenty-one years old yesterday, was selected today as Toronto's most beautiful girl. She was born here, but went to school in Vancouver and returned here only a month ago.

Dianne attributes her beauty to lots of walking and wholesome food. There's nothing she likes better than getting up in the morning at 7 o'clock and going for a long walk, said the winner, who at four years of age was modelling infant clothes in Vancouver. She hopes to get a position as model here.

SAMUEL INSULL DIES IN PARIS

Ex-Monarch of Enormous Utilities Empire Succumbs To Heart Attack

PARIS, July 16 (AP).—Samuel Insull, white-haired ex-monarch of a $4,000,000,000 utilities empire he created in the United States, died today from a heart attack in a Paris subway station.

Seventy-eight years old, Insull had suffered from a heart ailment for several years and had been asked by his wife "never to take a subway because it was bad for his heart."

Mrs. Insull herself tearfully disclosed this when she learned of his death. She had left him to go shopping just two hours before.

But the aged Insull, true to his frequent declarations of recent years that he was "now a poor man," had gone to take the subway train to go for luncheon.

He walked alone down a long flight of stairs into the Place de la Concorde Station.

FELL WITH CRASH

"Just as he extended his hand to present his ticket to be punched, the ticket taker said later, "he threw his hands up in the air, his knees gave way under him, and he fell forward upon his face with a crash."

Subway attendants called a policeman, who hurried Insull to a nearby emergency hospital. He was pronounced dead on arrival at 1.30

Gives Reasons for Failure Of Mt. Everest Expedition

"The hardships experienced by the 1938 British Mount Everest Expedition in its unsuccessful attempt to climb the world's highest peak, 29,002 feet above sea level, are vividly described here by the leader of the group.

By H. W. TILMAN

RONGBUK BASE CAMP, Tibet, June 25 (by airmail via London).—Another attempt, the fifth, to climb Mount Everest has failed, and Leigh-Mallory's, or rather his companion Bullock's, dictum that the chances against an assault party in any one season are 50 to 1 begins to appear dismally true.

Members of the present expedition can give adequate reasons for their failure, and readers of this dispatch may draw their conclusions; but, before I left England, a candid friend warned me whatever happened not to blame the weather.

HELD UP BY SNOW

My party left Gangtok on March 4. Heavy snow in the vicinity of Tanqu held us up for a week, but, thanks to the interest taken in the expedition by His Highness the Maharaja of Sikkim and his officials, we were able to cross the Pass Serpo La, dividing Sikkim from Tibet, on March 17. On the Tibetan side of the pass, the weather was what I imagined would be typical during the march through that country at that time of the year. We had a furious wind and lowering clouds, but thereafter, to our surprise, we experienced fine, sunny days and sufficiently warm—if not genial, local weather.

Rongbuk, sixteen miles north of Everest, was reached on April 6, but, although the climate had been less rigorous than we had a right to expect, dust or the dryness of the air had already given Capt. F.

FIGHTING FIRE ON MANY FRONTS WITH FOREST THREAT AT PEAK

Campbell River Scene of Serious Conflagration, With 750 Working to Stem Flames' Onslaught—Thousands of Acres of Timber Destroyed, With Toll of Damage Still Mounting

Rising Humidity Helping United States Fire-Fighters

BRITISH Columbia fire-fighters faced the peak of the current forest fire season yesterday, with 750 men engaged at an outbreak on several thousand acres at Campbell River, and numerous other fires reported throughout the province. The Provincial Forest Service declared the week-end period to be fire-days, asking the public to keep out of the woods, or else to take every precaution on their outings.

Moving on many fronts, the Forest Service pressed airplanes, boats and trains into service to take fire fighters to the scene of greatest need. Two hundred and fifty men were transferred from Vancouver to Campbell River on Friday night, joining 500 men already there and fighting to stem a severe fire which jumped the river and spread to both ends of Campbell Lake. Thousands of acres of timber have been wiped out, and a mounting toll of damage recorded. Yesterday, fire crews held the worst blaze with back fires, fire lines and pumps.

FORESEE CONTROL

Recounting the Campbell River and other outbreaks, E. C. Manning, chief forester, said that Provincial authorities had been forced to stop travel at Forbes Landing, but believed that the big fire was now being brought under control. More than 400 loggers from Bloedel and other camps, and 350 provincial fighters are concentrated at the scene.

Bomb Exploded At Entrance of Belfast Journal

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, July 17 (AP).—A bomb explosion in the centre of Belfast early today blasted away the entrance to a branch office of the newspaper Daily Mail. Extensive damage was done to the building, and windows in the neighborhood were shattered. No one was injured.

French Land Taken Over By Germans

RHEINAU, France, July 16 (AP).—A German labor battalion took over 2,500 acres of French-owned farmlands on the German side of the Rhine today after the owners declined Germany's offer to buy the properties.

The mayor of Rheinau said the German Government offered 12,000,000 francs (about $434,000) for the lands but that the owners refused to sell because they considered they were worth five times that much.

BRANDS GERMAN REPORTS FALSE

Czech Government Charges Neighbor With Brutal and Disturbing Interference

PRAHA, Czechoslovakia, July 16 (AP).—The Czechoslovak Government tonight charged Germany with "brutal and disturbing" interference in the republic's negotiations with her German minority.

The charge was included in an official statement denying a report by the German official news agency, of new Czechoslovak troop movements.

Czechoslovakia intends to give the Germans as well as other minority groups every possibility to co-operate in solving the minorities problem, which enters a decisive stage Monday, the statement said.

HINDERING NEGOTIATIONS

But, despite the Government's good will, and despite its liberal attitude, the Government declared certain foreign propaganda is "rudely impeding these negotiations."

The danger of the issue was emphasized anew today by reports on both sides of the German-Czechoslovak border of troop movements.

But officials calmly denied German reports of new Czechoslovak troop mobilization movements, and refused to be alarmed over a reported shift of German soldiers.

Midget Plane Is Success in Test Flight

ST. LOUIS, July 16 (AP).—A tiny, home-made biplane twelve feet long and with a wingspread of only thirteen feet, was given a successful test flight today at Lambert-St. Louis Airport.

James Malone, veteran flyer, took aloft the craft, designed and built by Vincent Linberg, twenty-five; it attained a speed of 170 miles per hour.

Linberg, who is not a pilot, worked evenings and other extra time on the ship for one and one-half years in a garage near his home. Parts and materials cost $1,200.

LIGHT RATE PROBE HERE

R. W. Beck Asks Public for Help in Compiling Electric Report

Comparative figures on the cost of production and distribution of electric light and power here are being compiled by R. W. Beck, consulting utility engineer for the city. Questionnaires will be delivered to every consumer of electricity in order to secure the detailed information required by Mr. Beck and his staff.

In a prepared statement issued yesterday morning, Mr. Beck said:

"Mayor McGavin and the member sof the City Council are determined to know just where the city and the people stand in this regard, and the only way we can get the information is to get it directly from the people who pay the bills.

"Every home, store and factory will be contacted. They know how much money they paid for their electricity, and their bills will indicate how much they used. Thus we will be able to determine how many hundreds of thousands of dollars were paid by the aggregate of the people for electricity and how much money it cost them to get it.

"Printed questionnaires have been prepared. These will be delivered to every consumer of electricity by a representative of mine. Several days later the completed questionnaires will be gathered up. It is contemplated that the survey will be completed by July 31.

"I am confident the people will co-operate with me in this undertaking. It is a large one, but be-

REBELS OCCUPY TERUEL TOWNS

Insurgents Make Important Gains on Drive Toward Valencia

HENDAYE, July 16 (AP).—The Spanish insurgent high command announced tonight capture of six important towns in an offensive which smashed nine miles through Government lines on the Teruel front.

The advance, carrying insurgents into Valencia Province more than sixty miles north of the port of Valencia, came as the civil war neared the end of its second year.

Presence of Generalissimo Francisco Franco's troops on Valencia soil cut the number of Government-held provinces to ten. Insurgents now hold thirty-five provinces, and five others are scenes of bitter fighting.

FIVE TOWNS OCCUPIED

Occupation of Mora de Rubielos, Rubielos de More, Alcolea, Pina and Barracas was announced by insurgents. Barracas is in the Enclave of Ademuz, which is separated from though a part of, Valencia Province.

To the east along the Teruel-Mediterranean highway, the insurgents captured the village of San Augustin. The village is a short distance north of the highway, forty-five miles airline northwest of Valencia.

Between Barracas and San Augustin, violent combats brought the contending forces into hand-to-hand fighting in the Manzanera sector south of the highway.

Government aviation appeared in strength for the first time in many weeks and Valencia authorities reported their pilots had shot down nine Fiat (Italian) pursuit planes over Government in the Sierra de Javalambre.

ROOSEVELT TO VISIT CANADA

United States President Plans to Meet Lord Tweedsmuir

SAN DIEGO, July 16 (AP).—President Roosevelt will visit Canada this Summer, presidential secretaries announced here today just before Mr. Roosevelt sailed aboard the United States naval cruiser Houston for an extended fishing trip.

The secretaries said the President's "good-will visit" to Canada would begin August 18. Mr. Roosevelt would leave either Washington or Hyde Park, N.Y., to meet Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, for a "hands-across-the-border" celebration in connection with the dedication of the Port Huron, Mich., International Bridge.

MAY NOT BE BACK

(Whether the meeting with Lord Tweedsmuir would actually take place depended on future plans of the Governor-General. During this week Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced the Governor-General would not return to Canada from the Old Country until September.)

Before he boarded the Houston, Mr. Roosevelt endorsed United States Senator William G. McAdoo's re-election campaign in a Los Angeles talk and referred cordially to him in another speech here.

After fishing in the Galapagos Islands vicinity of the Pacific from the Houston, the President will proceed through the Panama Canal and back toward Pensacola, Fla., where he will disembark August 9.

INDIAN CHIEFTAIN ASKS KING'S AID

Chief Walking Eagle Wants His Majesty to Keep White Men Off Tribal Land

ROCKY MOUNTAIN HOUSE, Alta., July 16 (CP).—A plea to the King to "keep the whites off the tribal land" of the Stoney Indians on the Kootenay plains, seventy-five miles west of here, has been forwarded to London.

In a letter signed by Chief Walking Eagle, it is urged that His Majesty carry out the promises of the "great white Queen," Queen Victoria.

In 1877, the chief declares Queen Victoria promised his tribe "you will have plenty game, tobacco, food." Now, white men have invaded their lands, hunting and trapping, and he wants the Kootenay plains declared a reservation for Indians only.

Navy Week Events To Be Ushered In by Visit From Cruiser

Mayor Andrew McGavin to Pay Respects to Commander-in-Chief Aboard H.M.S. York on July 25—Interesting Programme Planned

H.M.S. YORK, light cruiser attached to the America and British West Indies squadron, is expected at Esquimalt for Navy Week on July 25. Mayor Andrew McGavin will pay his respects to the commander-in-chief at 10:30 o'clock in the morning, and the call will be returned at the City Hall at 11:40 o'clock.

Mayor McGavin received word from Lieutenant-Commander P. M. Flagg, commander of the First Fleet Division, United States Naval Reserve, that U.S.S. Eagle, No. 57, will not be here for Navy Week as originally planned.

Navy Week events will commence at 10:30 o'clock on the morning of July 27, when a team from H.M.S. York competes with Victoria cricketers at Macdonald Park, according to a programme announced by Alderman W. H. Davies, chairman of the City Council celebration committee. Aquatic sports will be held in the Crystal Garden pool at 7 o'clock in the evening.

Other events listed are:

Friday, July 29—Naval ball at Government House.

Saturday, July 30 — Highland games and Scottish sports at Macdonald Park, 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Retreat by H.M.S. York band on the Empress Hotel grounds, 7 p.m.

Sunday, July 31—Drumhead service at St. Paul's Garrison Church, Esquimalt.

VETERANS' DAY

Tuesday, August 2—Naval Veterans' Day. Boat races at Esquimalt Harbor, 10:30 a.m. Soccer match at Royal Athletic Park, H.M.S. York vs. Royal Canadian Navy, 5:30 p.m. Naval Veterans' Branch, Canadian Legion amoker, Chamber of Commerce auditorium, 8 p.m. Continuation of bowling tournament.

Wednesday, August 3—Street parade, 2:30 p.m. Box lacrosse, 6:30 p.m. Pacific Coast naval boxing championships, Royal Athletic Park, 8 p.m. Continuation of bowling tournament.

CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

Thursday, August 4—Naval sports, Macdonald Park, 1:30 p.m. Pacific Northwest conference of mayors' dinner at Empress Hotel, 6 p.m. Baseball at Royal Athletic Park. Continuation of bowling tournament.

Friday, August 5—Football game, 6 p.m. Naval ball at Empress Hotel, 9:30 p.m. Continuation of bowling tournament.

Saturday, August 6—Cricket at Macdonald Park, Victoria vs. H.M.S. York, 10:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Lacrosse game, 2:30 p.m. Seattle vs. Victoria softball game, 3:30 p.m. Illuminated street parade, 8:30 p.m. Finals of bowling tournament.

Exhibition to Be Given Here Today By Visiting Band

THE Bothell High School Drill Band, which gave a spectacular display before an unusually large crowd at Royal Athletic Park in connection with the "Miss Victoria" contest, will make a further appearance this afternoon, in Beacon Hill Park, before returning to Seattle. Playing on the march, the youthful members of the band will execute a series of manoeuvres, and demonstrations of baton twirling will be given by the drum major and "majorettes."

Takes Yukon Trail Again

—Photograph by Associated Screen News.

SAM McGEE

Placed among the immortals by Robert W. Service, who is on the trail to the Yukon once more in quest of gold, after an absence of fifteen years. Portrayed by Service as the miner from Tennessee who hated the cold of the Yukon, Sam, though he will be seventy this week, is ready to endure again the rigors of the North, and is preparing to go placer mining at the headwaters of the Liard River, which he will reach by airplane. In the above picture he is seen in the rose garden at the Empress Hotel, where he is spending a holiday before "getting back to work."

Perfect CLEANING Service

THERE is no time of the year when prompt, efficient cleaning service is more appreciated than it is during the Summer holiday months. You are going away and you want your things returned QUICKLY . . . you are in Victoria only for a day or so and you want service that is ON TIME. You can count upon Pantorium for the service you want WHEN YOU WANT IT. Pantorium can promise you that because it is the largest cleaning and dyeing plant on Vancouver Island and a full staff is maintained to give specially-prompt service during the Summer months.

FORCE ENTRY TO FORTIFIED LAKE

Japanese Armed Launches Make Way Past Strong Lion Hill Forts

SHANGHAI, July 17 (AP). — Five Japanese armed launches were reported today to have entered the mouth of Lake Poyang, water route to Nanchang, Central China base of the Chinese air force.

The launches were said to be attacking Chinese positions. They gained the mouth of the lake under cover of fire from Japanese warships shelling Chinese Lion Hill forts along the Yangtze.

Lion Hill forts had held up the Japanese infantry advance on Kiulang, 135 miles down the Yangtze River from Hankow, provisional Chinese capital.

FIGHTING IN PROGRESS

Heavy fighting was in progress around the mouth of Lake Poyang. Japanese reported yesterday that they had silenced guns of the Lion Hill forts, but the report was not confirmed from Chinese sources.

Studded with guns, the hillside has been the principal target of Japanese artillery and bombers since July 5 when Chinese withdrew from Hukow, across the entrance to Lake Poyang.

Meanwhile reports from the Yellow River sector, 300 miles north, said Japanese were faced with a new menace from steadily rising flood waters which threatened to cut off Kaifeng, westernmost point on the Lunghai Railway occupied by Japanese after their offensive against Chengchow was turned back by bursting dikes.

cause it will mean so much to each and every person, I am sure everyone will fully co-operate with my representatives. We have been forced to this survey because of our inability to get the information in any other way. I wish to warn all citizens not to turn in any questionnaires except to a duly authorized representative of my office, one displaying a letter of authority from me," Mr. Beck stated.

Mr. Beck was engaged by Mayor McGavin and the City Council two months ago to study the electric utility situation here and to make a report and recommendations to the franchise committee.

B.C. Electric Railway Company, Ltd., street railway and electrical franchises will shortly expire. The city's contract to sell water to the company has already expired, but is being renewed on a monthly basis.

Mayor McGavin announced Mr. Beck's report would be ready about August 15.

WAS WELL KNOWN IN SPORTS HERE

William Thompson, President of Victoria West Football Club, Dies at Seventy-One

President of the Victoria West Football Club, and at one time manager of the team, William "Bill" Thompson, 742 Lampson Street, a well-known figure in local soccer circles for many years, passed away at the Jubilee Hospital late Friday night at the age of seventy-one. Mr. Thompson was born in Belfast, Ireland, and came to Victoria in 1896, and at the time of his death was manager of the Provincial Canneries.

In addition to his widow, he is survived by four sons, Charles Stewart Thompson, Ashcroft; John W. Thompson, North Vancouver, and James Kenneth and Herbert K. Thompson, at the family residence; four daughters, Mrs. A. J. Pulmer, Victoria; Mrs. S. Bell, Vancouver; Mrs. J. Hedley, Port Alberni, and Mrs. F. Morgan, Victoria, as well as two brothers, one in Victoria and one in Toronto, and two sisters in Ireland.

The late Mr. Thompson managed the Victoria West Cllub several years ago, and then became president, a position he held up to the time of his passing.

Funeral services will be held on Tuesday afternoon at 3.30 from Hayward's B.C. Funeral Parlors, and interment will be in the family plot in Ross Bay Cemetery. Rev. James Hood will officiate.

Died After Fall From Fire Escape

VANCOUVER, July 16 (CP).—A man identified as Gabe McCulloch, about thirty-five, fell forty feet from the fire-escape of a downtown hotel tonight and died en route to hospital.

Witnesses said McCulloch had been sitting on the fire escape and suddenly toppled over, landing in a lane below.

He is believed to be a retired railroad worker. His parents reside at Penticton, B.C.

HAVE SNOWBALL FIGHT IN THE HOT WEATHER

SOUTH BEND, Ind., July 16 (AP).—Perspiring police stared when Otis Towpe, a warehouse superintendent here, told them "barefoot boys" engaged "in a snowball fight" had broken a window in the building. Then he explained.

"Snow" was piled near the building after being scraped from refrigeration coils in the cold storage room. Several youths saw it—and the battle was on.

MANY APPLAUD YOUTHFUL BAND

Drill Team Executes Clever Manoeuvres at Royal Athletic Park

All roads led to Royal Athletic Park last night when the Bothell High School Drill Band, Seattle, a talented combination of fifty young players, whose ages range from twelve to eighteen years, contributed a lively concert programme and gave an extremely clever exhibition of intricate marching manoeuvres and baton twirling.

The demonstration was arranged by the Junior Chamber of Commerce in connection with the "Miss Victoria" contest, and the six candidates for the honor took a prominent part in the proceedings. Long before 8 o'clock every seat in the grandstand and bleachers had been taken, and by the time the entertainment commenced the large crowded had overflowed onto the grass.

SPECTACULAR ENTRANCE

After a moment of darkness, floodlights were turned on to illuminate the spectacular entrance of the visiting band, led by the major domo and drum majors, and to the accompaniment of quick-step march tunes, the members of the team executed a series of "classical marching" manoeuvres, which included a smart form of turning, invented by Mark Hart, director of the band.

Marching up and down in front of the grandstand, the band contributed six concert selections, dedicated in turn to the six "Miss Victoria" candidates, who were introduced to the audience by Duke McLeod, master of ceremonies.

BATON TWIRLING

The youthful drum majors gave exhibitions of baton twirling while the band went through its manoeuvres, and specially featured was a remarkably clever demonstration by Ruth Malick, national champion drum "majorette." A clarinette solo was contributed by Donald Gardiner, Washington State clarinet champion.

Local entertainers supporting the "Miss Victoria" candidates, contributed the first half of the programme, and Miss Addison appeared in person in a pleasing toe dance. The programme comprised songs by Thomas Kelway, for Miss Wilson, a humorous recitation by Charles Patrick, for Miss Bishop; numbers by the Imperial Male Quartette, for Miss White; Reel o' Tulloch, by Miss Gwen Dewar's pupils, for Miss Moffat, and a humorous recitation by Miss Hope Denbigh, for Miss McGregor.

At the conclusion of the entertainment, it was announced that the Bothell band would contribute a further programme in Beacon Hill Par kthis afternoon, from 2.30 to 3.30 o'clock.

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL

VANCOUVER, July 16 (CP).—Mrs. C. Stromnes was taken to hospital with a possible fracture of the skull tonight after an automobile driven by her husband collided with another car at a residential intersection. Her condition was fair.

The husband escaped uninjured, as did occupants of the other car.

Saanich Society and Victoria Organization Entertained in Pioneers' Log Cabin, Saanichton, With Addresses Giving Story of Past

A RICH field in Vancouver Island history was briefly surveyed yesterday afternoon when, on the occasion of the joint picnic of the Victoria branch of the British Columbia Historical Association and the Saanich Pioneers' Society, the two organizations met at the Pioneers' Cabin, Saanichton, and heard from several speakers something about the personalities and events that laid the foundations of the district.

The big log-cabin, constructed about five years ago in the Saanich Fair Grounds as a museum and pioneers' meeting place, made a comfortable and picturesque rendezvous, visitors finding a wealth of interest in the relics of pioneer days: an English piano more than 100 years old, brought round the Horn; Saanich Fair posters dating back to the seventies; faded photographs of old wedding groups; old carriage lamps, now used to light the entrance; well-worn side-saddles used by the ladies of the sixties and seventies when they rode the fifteen or sixteen miles into Victoria to do their shopping; old wooden oxen yokes, harvesters' cradles, hand-cast horse-shoes. Masses of flowers were set about the room, and after the formal part of the programme a generous "sit-down" tea was served on the wide veranda under the direction of Mrs. Richard Nimmo, granddaughter of one of the first farmers of the district.

WELCOMES VISITORS

Dr. T. A. Rickard, president of the B.C. Historical Association, presided, and introduced Lawrence Hagan, president of the Saanich Pioneer Society; George T. Michell, president of the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society; J. B. Munro, deputy minister of agriculture; Alec MacDonald, first president of the Saanich Pioneer Society; Alexander Smith, principal of Mount Newton High School; C. H. Cogswell and G. H. Sluggett, two of the first Government teachers in Saanich; and John Dean, another Island pioneer, all of whom gave to the guests some interesting information about the district.

As the two societies were working along similar lines, it was to be hoped they would have many similar joint gatherings, said Mr. Hagan in welcoming the Victoria visitors to Saanich. It was very flattering and encouraging to Saanich to see such interest on the part of the B.C. Historical Society in their district, whose pioneers they wished to commemorate and pay honor to.

FINE AGRICULTURISTS

In the days of the Hudson's Bay Company, said Dr. Rickard, North Saanich had been regarded as the most promising agricultural district on Vancouver Island, and he understood it had lived up to this. He gave a brief survey of the development of roads and railways in the district, beginning with the first road made early in the sixties for ox-team. A railway was completed in February, 1894, operating for twenty-five years. In 1913 the B.C. Electric had constructed another, which had gone into disuse after a few years. Dr. Rickard recalled that the late Dr. Tolmie had laid the foundation-stone of the Saanich Pioneers' cabin in 1933.

Representing the North and South Saanich Agricultural Association, Mr. Michell also extended greetings to the visitors, and proceeded to give a short history of his society, the oldest of its kind west of the Great Lakes, having held fairs for the past sixty-nine years. The first fair had been held near the present Macdonald Farm, the next two at Bannockburn. The present fair grounds were a portion of the larger grounds needed at a time when the people insisted on a race-track. An invitation was extended to the visitors to attend the forthcoming Saanich Fair.

PROSPEROUS FARMING

J. B. Munro, deputy minister of agriculture, also referred to the interesting nature of the North and South Saanich Agricultural Fairs. From the very beginning the Saanich farmers had grown exhibition products, beginning with prize-winning wheat shown at the Paris Exhibition in the seventies. Saanich products—strawberries, gladioli, dahlias, peas—today helped Saanich to merit its title of the eighties—"The Devonshire of British Columbia." Mr. Munro in response to a question, stated that the Government Experimental Farm at Agassiz was started in 1888, and that at Sidney, under the Federal Government, twenty-six years ago.

The Pioneers' Cabin, said Mr. Macdonald, had been built both as a home for the Saanich Pioneers' Society and as a memorial to the pioneers. The leaded windows in the front, much admired, had come from the first church in the province, that at Sapperton, constructed by the Royal Engineers. Saanich pioneer families and others had been generous in contributing to the souvenirs of pioneer days housed in the building.

EDUCATION

The history of education, both from the academic and human standpoint, was rehearsed by Alexander Smith and Messrs. Cogswell and Sluggett. The last two had been contemporary teachers in the pioneer days of the community, and saw among the audience some of their former pupils. Mr. Cogswell stated that whereas in Nova Scotia, where he had first taught, he had been familiar with the necessity of discipline, in Saanich the boys were marvelously studious, trying to get into the Victoria High School. Mr. Sluggett said that when he took the British Columbia teachers' examination in 1881 there were only forty-five teachers in the province, and it was not unusual for one of them to have to teach from forty to fifty pupils of every class from primary to entrance.

Interesting facts gleaned from the reports of Rev. Edward Cridge, one of the first superintendents of education in the province, covered the history of the Saanich schools from the seventies. North Saanich School was organized in 1872, South Saanich the same year, West Saanich in 1880, and Sidney in 1894, said Mr. Smith.

AERIAL PHOTOS AID ENGINEERS

Photography From Captive Balloons Used by Southern Pacific Railway

Aerial photography from captive balloons may become an important aid to the construction and maintenance of rail roadbeds if experiments being conducted by Southern Pacific engineers prove successful, it was disclosed today.

So far the novel undertaking has been directed chiefly toward finding out why some sections of roadbed suffer more than others in the same vicinity from erosion during the rainy season, according to the announcement.

Photographs taken from the air showed details of the terrain not disclosed by ground surveys, thus giving new information on the contour of the land. This, in turn, has a definite bearing on the cause of quick erosion.

MODE OF OPERATION

The experiments were inaugurated more than a year ago under the direction of G. H. Schneider, assistant engineer of the railroad's staff at Tucson, Arizona. Since that time several types and sizes of balloons with various kinds of cameras suspended under them have been tested. The cameras are operated from the ground by electrical connection through wires running up the guy cable to a magnet which trips the shutter, it was explained.

Southern Pacific engineering officials believe aerial photos may also be useful in bringing out to perfect scale all irregularities of a terrain through which new construction is to be undertaken or where rerouting of tracks is planned

BUILDERS SHOW MORE ACTIVITY

Victoria and District Returns Indicate an Increase in Building Trades

After a short lapse in building activity in the municipalities surrounding the city of Victoria, there has been a return to what has come to be regarded as normal conditions. Saanich has returned during the past week with a showing of $14,700, in new homes while Oak Bay with two permits representing a total estimated expenditure of $6,000 is maintaining its steady activity in the construction line.

SAANICH IS BUSY

In Saanich the list of buildings is headed in value by a home on Cedar Hill Road which it is estimated will cost $5,000. It is being erected by Capt. Thomson and will contain seven rooms.

C. F. Sparks will build a five-roomed home to cost $3,400 on Savannah Avenue.

C. Moggeridge will build a four-roomed house on Quadra Street to cost $2,200.

On Dunlin Road a four-roomed home will be erected for H. M. Hayward at a cost of $1,500.

A five-roomed home to cost $4,200 will be erected by L. U. Carver on Doncaster Drive.

W. Pistill will erect a $900 house containing three rooms on Cordova Bay Road, and H. W. Draper, on Millgrove Road, will erect a two-roomed house to cost $500.

OAK BAY HOMES

In the municipality of Oak Bay, P. C. and A. Stephenson plan to erect, at 2796 Dewdney Avenue, a six-roomed home to cost $3,500.

At 1023 St. David Street, A. H. Young will erect a five-roomed house to cost $2,500.

Obituary

City Hall,
Victoria, B.C.,
July 17, 1938.

Dear Citizen:

Your Mayor and City Council are very much concerned about the rates charged for electricity in Victoria, and have engaged the services of the undersigned to investigate and determine facts concerning an enterprise affecting the economic existence of every family in Victoria, quite as vitally as the taxes you pay on your home; possibly more so, because you may exist enjoyably without taxes.

On the other hand, in this modern age, existence without electricity to light your home, to operate your radio, electric iron, washing machine, sweeper and many other appliances would make living less enjoyable.

In order to indicate the relative weight each may have on your income, it might be well to compare how much you pay toward each.

Amount of money paid in 1937 for taxes on your home? $.....
Amount of money paid in 1937 for electricity in your home? $.....

WHETHER YOU OWN YOUR-OWN HOME OR NOT, your whole-hearted co-operation in answering the questions attached hereto, as fully as possible, and mailing the completed form to the City Hall, is earnestly solicited, in order to most accurately provide the necessary data to your elected officials for their use, and to assist them in their endeavors to obtain fair and equitable light and power rates for all classes in the community during the forthcoming Franchise negotiations with the B.C. Electric Railway Company.

Respectfully,
R. W. BECK,

ROYAL AIR FORCE FACILITIES

Great Britain's desire to establish Royal Air Force facilities in Canada is because there are geographic handicaps in the British Isles. Larger areas for safe flying over territory that is British are wanted to expand the training of airmen. Great Britain is building up an air force of 5,000 planes. The proposal advanced is that many of these would be based permanently in Canada and that pilots would be trained in flying over much more spacious areas than are available in the British Isles. Canada is the nearest of the Dominions to the centre of the Empire. Great Britain has mapped out an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 on the air defences of the Empire. She is willing to spend a very considerable portion of this sum in Canada; willing, too, to train Canadian pilots in their homeland, whereas at present they are leaving the Dominion in their hundreds to join the Royal Air Force.

The plan, as proposed, means a good deal more than the mere training of pilots. It means the building of airplanes in Canada for the Royal Air Force through the establishment of the necessary industrial plant. It is part and parcel of a scheme for strengthening the defences of the Empire, not one for Great Britain alone; how could it be for Great Britain alone when large numbers of airplanes would be based permanently in Canada? Only Mr. Mackenzie King's idea of what autonomy means prevents the recommendation of the British air mission being fulfilled. He does not want the Royal Air Force setting up a military station in Canada, which shows somewhat of a retrograde spirit in envisioning what is best for the Empire as a whole in the matter of defence. He says, in effect, that if a formal request is made to Canada for the training of citizens of Great Britain in a flying school and flying facilities in this country it "will be met with a naked negative in the interest of Canadian autonomy." Since putting forth this viewpoint, and in the face of public opinion, Mr. King has somewhat modified his attitude. He now has signified that training facilities may be provided for British pilots in Canadian flying schools. The question is are such facilities available? If they were so many of the youth of the country would not be going overseas to join the Royal Air Force.

CONTENTMENT

Mary Webb in her story "Gone to Earth" says that the happiness of Abel, Hazel's father, was because, "all his means of livelihood were joys to him." He had the art of perpetual happiness in this—that he could earn as much as he needed by doing the work he loved. He played at flower shows and country dances, revivals and weddings. He sold his honey, and sometimes his bees. He delighted in wreath-making, gardening and carpentering, and always in the background was his music—some new air to try on the gilded harp, some new chord to turn to master." The authoress envisioned a man who had solved the secret of contentment, who was doing what he wanted to do and in doing it was keeping his mind alive, who had won his own independence and the power to create his own fund of information. Abel had found for himself a world in which his soul could thrive.

There are those who contend, with a good deal of worldly justification, that discontent is a sign of progress, that it is only possible to improve the circumstances of life by expressing dissatisfaction with its present fortunes, and by seeking to change them. That is true to a degree in a material sense, but even in that sense, when there is an expression of the unrest to which the world seems ever subjected, the discontent shown issues very often in the gravest moral confusion. There is this that it is well to remember, namely, that where improvements are sought in environment, where the individual desires to increase his possessions, where he wants greater privileges accorded to him, he is relying on things rather than on principles. He may win all at which he aims and still lack either happiness or contentment, for where he relies on the things that give him material satisfactions, and they are mainly directed towards larger opportunities for pleasure, he may still find that his moral judgment is perverted, that he is robbed of the power of appreciation of the true values of life, because he has not laid up for himself on earth treasures that neither moth nor rust can corrupt.

The desire for progress need not be inconsistent with contentment, for that progress if it is to approach its highest form is to be found in the development of an inner harmony of life with moral and spiritual realities. It is those who are discontented with themselves and seek betterment in their view of life who are able to develop something that is very fine in their nature, because they can be led on by discipline and faith towards an ideal, no matter how far it may be removed from their present attainments. The sense of discontent with failures, of individual insufficiency, can be made the foundation of true contentment. This is so, the more particularly, on the plane of spiritual advancement because it is the paradox of that contentment that it indues the individual with content "in desiring more because it already enjoys much of the harmony of life, and, like a skilled musician who adds to the grandeur of what is already a pure and worthy melody, the contented mind attains a fuller experience of the joyous anthem of conscious spiritual progress."

Often in a world of discontent with material conditions the short view is taken; it requires equanimity in outlook to range to the horizons of knowledge and to express the faith that lies beyond, for it is in such an outlook that life is surveyed as a whole. It has a satisfaction that supersedes all other satisfactions, an assurance that however life may be buffeted, however material fortunes may change, there is that inner knowledge that nothing can rob one of the contentment inspired by confidence in present possession of happiness and the hope of larger attainments. It is possible where there is spiritual vision to make the mind its own place and to realize that even what is dark and forbidding can be justified by faith. Such a mind has found itself and by its exercise the soul can thrive. It expresses in action the knowledge that evil and man's true self are antipathetic, that there is something essentially incongruous in them. It is by the harmonious action of all a man's powers that good issues and that he responds to its spirit, that he acquires moral coherence and congruity with the Divine Will, that manhood is developed on its highest plane, that contentment, which means peace of mind, is won.

Ovid likened the faith of true friendship seen in adversity to "yellow gold tried in fire." That simile might be used for the contentment that is not of time but of eternity. There is even contentment in the knowledge that the highest moral level to which man can aspire with all his agonizing efforts is but a pitiful instalment of the ideal to which the best that is in him bids him aspire. It is all a matter of rising above or seeking beyond the cares and claims of a transitory life, of seeing things sub specie aeternitatis. That means a widened field of view, by the yardstick of which the temporal things are weighed in the scales of the eternal. It is this appraisement of the fortunes and affairs of life which is possible to the quiet mind that has won contentment through the broader outlook inspired by a faith that knows no boundaries by things of earth, that gives to the believer what has been called the appreciation "not that nothing matters much or that all things matter equally, but that the central hope to which he clings does matter supremely and corrects his vision of all besides."

INTELLIGENCE TESTS

Modern psychology has now discovered what was obvious since the beginning of human life on earth. It set out with the assumption that scientific means could test mental reactions of all sorts of people to all kinds of situations. In the University of Chicago such tests have been in progress for six years and their results analyzed. Now Dr. Louis Thurstone, head of the Psychology Department, has to admit a fundamental failure, in fact to admit a simple commonsense conclusion which was known long before psychiatrists were. It is that while it may be possible to test with reasonable accuracy certain specific mental qualities, it is not possible to define general mentality. The human mind has quirks that defy scientific analysis. An individual may, in some particulars, show highly-developed aptitudes, while in others the lowest ratings are evident. Dr. Thurstone says that "only in its barest fundamentals can general intelligence be measured unfallingly by test." This was always so and probably always will be. It is not even known what average intelligence is, or what constitutes the average. Probably, as one commentator on the findings of psychiatrists says, George Bernard Shaw may be right when he says that the average intelligence of mankind is still well below the average.

AN EDITOR HONORED

Occasions are somewhat rare, in fact few and far between, when a city pays tribute to the work done by a newspaper in its midst. Such, however, happened in Winnipeg the other day when Mr. W. L. MacTavish, of The Tribune, was honored prior to leaving for Vancouver to become editor-in-chief of The Province. The citizens' dinner given to him was a personal tribute to his editorship of The Tribune; it was, as well, recognition of the place that newspaper occupies in the affairs of the Prairie metropolis. The association of Mr. MacTavish with The Tribune had lasted for sixteen years during which period he had proved himself a force in the capacities of both reporter and editor. He has, in fact, made a definite mark in Canadian journalism, one that was recognized by his fellow citizens of Winnipeg, and given expression to at a public dinner at which tributes were paid to Mr. MacTavish and The Tribune by Mr. E. C. MacKay, president of the Board of Trade; Mr. R. B. Hunter, president of the Canadian Club; Mr. J. W. Dafoe, editor-in-chief of The Free Press and Mr. Robert England. Such an honor is a happy augury of Mr. MacTavish's capabilities for his new sphere of usefulness with The Vancouver Province.

The Weather

Meteorological Office, Victoria, B.C., at 7.00 p.m., July 16, 1938.

SYNOPSIS OF WEATHER CONDITIONS

Ship reports are not available off the British Columbia Coast, but pressure appears to be low off the Queen Charlottes. The weather has been fine in all parts of this Province, with abnormally high temperatures over the Interior, continuing a dangerous fire hazard in the forest.

It is fair and warm in the Prairie Provinces.

Note and Comment

By Sandham Graves

People are brave. A dozen times in the course of a single day one is forced to admire courage in others; quiet, unobtrusive bravery which seldom gets into the newspapers, and, yet, without which this world would be a grey and dreary place. Yes, people are brave, and human, and funny, and sad, and somehow lovable, look at it how you will. Take one of those informative little birds who hear all and say nothing, and follow it. The little bird may lead you into strange places; for instance:

• • •

It is dark here in this long, narrow gallery, hardly more than a passageway between the oderiferous litter of commercial backyards and a private alley. Along one side of the wall faded plush and leather-covered seats are raised high on a long dais, with wooden footrests by pairs in front of each seat. There is a short counter, with a meagre stock of shoelaces, blacking and tan polish displayed to view. In his shirt sleeves is a young man, stooped almost double over a pair of business shoes. Above the shoes are a pair of light socks, the conventional turned-up cuffs of a pair of business trousers, and above that a business-man. Below the shoes, around the shoes, in front of the shoes, and all over the shoes at one time are the long and strangely talented hands of the young man. A bootblack; you say. Ah, but listen to the little bird. This is no ordinary bootblack. This young man, with his handsome eyes and his swinging arms, is a college graduate. He is a Master of This and a Bachelor of That. He is the principal of a Canadian high school, and successful at that. What is he doing here? Listen to the little bird. He is relieving his father, in his own holidays, so that his honored parent may get a short vacation in the country; a vacation at his son's home, a few days of ease and rest. Money is scarce, the father is old; so the young man shines the shoes of his father's customers—and does it with a smile. That is brave!

• • •

Follow the little bird, again. It is quiet out here in a suburb. Each house is detached, and individually distinctive. Here is one you instinctively would call a home; the trees and flowers are grouped so carefully around it. The branches of the trees approach the wall of the home at one point, knotting together in a mass of green leaves in front of a window. A pair of robins have selected that quiet, cosy spot for their nest. Busily they fly with grass and straw, and bits of down. The nest grows fast. Inside the home, the progress of the nest is watched by a young woman and her mother. The elderly woman takes a keen delight in that nest. She watches each move of the birds. Now one egg is laid; now two; now three; blue as the heavens themselves. Now the long vigil commences, warming the eggs into life. The elder woman watches on, entranced. The young woman watches the nest, the home, and her mother more than a little anxiously. The eggs hatch out. The awkward fledglings get their feathers, and crazily begin to fly. One flies from the nest, another, and at last the third bird is gone. Time swings a little around its course. The birds are noisy in the garden, old and young. Inside the house the elder woman smiles, remembering their first flight; and, perhaps, the first flight of other, human creatures. Then, quietly at peace, her soul takes flight, leaving but a last year's human nest. Ah, there, too, was quiet courage!

• • •

Follow, still, the little bird. Here is a youngster bubbling over with life and happiness. His eyes are snapping with delight, as he recalls how yesterday he took a ride in a streamlined, humming airplane; his first time up aloft. Seven minutes in the air; seven glorious and eventful minutes. How he lives the scene again! Was he not afraid? you ask. No need to ask the little bird, the youngster's eyes supply the answer. He took his seat, the belt was fastened, the door swung shut and bolted. The motors, taxi-ing, hummed a busy tune. The motors roared, now in the take-off. Ah, now he'd see the plane jump off the ground. Surprised, he didn't. The plane rushed fast across the field, but someone pulled the ground away beneath the wheels. Slower and slower moved the plane. Lower and lower fell the ground. This was flying! He was a passenger in the silver, humming man-made bird! Now the youngster used his eyes. There below was the airport, fading fast away. There were fields, in square yellow patches. There was a motor car, crawling like a blue beetle on a ribbon of a road. There was a harbor, a bridge across an estuary, fishing boats like match-sticks, side by side. A thousand wonders, seen from 1,000 feet above the level of the ground. The minutes fled like seconds. The humming, man-made bird commenced to turn. Its nose went down, and now the airport rushed up fast. Roofs gave place to houses, with their walls. Human beings changed from rounded heads to full length portraits. The wheels brushed the ground, the motors hummed a lower tune in taxi-ing, and stopped. The flight was over. Seven minutes off the earth. The black eyes snap and flash to even think of it. And on the ground was one who clenched his hands and watched, until the silver bird returned to safety. That also called for courage!

• • •

The little bird swings on for many, many leagues. Here is a Canadian sportsman, politician, gentleman, enjoying dinner in an English hostel. After dinner out comes his pipe. "Sorry, Sir, no pipes!" from a hurrying waiter. "What, no pipes!" "No pipes!" The visitor surveys a room filled thick with smoke from Turkish cigarettes, recalls their reputed origin, and leaves a little miffed. Better no dinner, than no pipe, by gad! There is a City Father, puffing up Seattle hills, where only cable cars may crawl. It's hot, and getting hotter. His hat pushed back upon his head, handkerchief in hand, and feeling moist outside and dry within, the civic gentleman sits on a high stool and orders iced black coffee. One iced black coffee, little birds can tell you, leads to more. They led to several, and then to several more; until the temperate bill had mounted to $2.50 for iced black coffees. Outside the day was hot, and getting hotter; but, alas, capacity was reached, and still unchanged were hills, and heat, and glare. The City Father laughed, a little, at himself. That, too, was brave.

• • •

The truth is people are brave, and human, and funny, and sad, and somehow lovable; or so a little bird has told me!

Keep Grass Clean

While the inspector sipped his breakfast coffee, an itinerant Chinese laborer knocked at the door and inquired if he could cut the lawn. "Go ahead," the official remarked. "The lawn mower is in the rear shed." Much to his surprise he saw the Oriental bring out an old carpet sweeper and attempt to manicure the long grass . . . Commander Len writes from Ben Bow Inn that a Piedmont, Cal., guest for several days was the life of the hotel with a fine baritone voice and endless lively piano selections. The commander asked a friend of the visitor why he was so cheerful. "He has every right to be," was the answer. "He is a well-known mortician where he comes from, and this is his holiday" . . . The office boy strolled in at 10 o'clock, fully sixty minutes behind schedule. "What's the idea? You should have been here at 9 o'clock," the boss sarcastically remarked. "Why? Did something happen?" the lad innocently asked . . . Our tobacconist friend informed us that the worst storm he ever weathered was about 500 words per minute. As a rule his better half says little.—G.B.

Too Much Salesman

Let is be understood from the outset that we have absolutely nothing against salesmen as a group. As a matter of fact—to use a trite term—some of our best friends—and enemies—come under that heading, and we wouldn't hurt their feelings for the world. But to that individual who yesterday succeeded in totally ruining our daily siesta at Ross Bay beach, we would like to make the following suggestion. Keep off the beaches if you are just going down there for business reasons. People flock to the sea front to forget their worries and not to be harrassed by persistent salesmen—and some of them are liable to resent it more actively than we did. And if it is your custom to drop out of the blue like a vulture on an unsuspecting victim, we suggest that you at least try the approche courteous. We think you'll find it an asset.—J.A.M.

Glancing Over Sport

Tempermental Mr. Ralph Guldahl, U.S. open golf champion two years in succession, was severely criticized by sport writers attending the P.G.A. tourney for his antics in his match with Dick Metz. He acted up not once but twice within a few holes. First he knocked Metz' ball off one green when stymied and then tossed his putter to the ground when stymied again . . . Today the Dominoes Basketball Club goes on its annual picnic at Arthur Cox's Summer home at Shawnigan Lake. All will be there except Austin Webster and Hank Rowe. The latter is down around the equator on the Cableship Restorer and Webster is working up country . . . The big "question mark" in the Chicago Cubs' camp will be on the firing line today when Dizzy Dean stages his comeback with that sore arm of his. Will the arm stand the strain or will it be a $185,000 failure to Owner Bill Wrigley? . . . Lester Patrick, boss of the New York Rangers, after seeing Al Hostak working out last week, says that he will take the middleweight diadem from the brow of Mr. Freddie Steele a week from Tuesday in Seattle . . . My opinion is Hostak by a kayo inside of ten rounds.—J.D.

MEETINGS BANNED

OSHAWA, Ont., July 16 (C.P.)—Neither Communists nor Fascists may use Oshawa parks or public buildings for meeting purposes, city council declared in a motion passed last night. In Toronto last week Joseph Farr, organizer for the Fascistic National Unit Party, declared he would hold a meeting in Oshawa July 19.

PORTAGE INLET

Sir,—Great changes have taken place in these waters during the past twenty years, and the present discussion of the safety of the inlet for bathing has real merit. The water level is lower or the mud on the bottom is thicker. At low tide herons walk over most of the expanse, and the weed patches are rapidly spreading. General opinion is that the water is dirtier than formerly. Very few canoes are now seen and there is little bathing.

Any scheme to improve conditions in these upper waters must include consideration of Colquitz and Deadman's Creeks. There is a growing suspicion that these originally fresh water streams are getting to be drainage systems for the farms and homes along their courses. The sewer outlets for the many homes being erected around the inlet must be investigated. Until this has been done and any unhealthy conditions rectified, one-way gates at the Gorge or inlets from the open sea cannot be successful.

FRED BENNETT.

"ANGLESEY"

Sir,—It matters not whether we spell the ancient Mona, as Anglesey, Anglesea, Anglezea or Anglezee. The choice is wide from the Island of Zealand to the Zuyder Zee and the Angle's Sea.

If as Mrs. H. Glynn-Ward states, the suffix "ey" is the old Anglo-Saxon word for "island," Anglesey, therefore, being an island, why is the neighboring Mersey a river? What is Swansea, a sea, island, river or town?

We still speak of "the Isles of Sheppy," Isle of Canvey, Island of Jersey, Island of Guernsey, and in our geography, of the Island of Anglesey.

"Ey" being more or less of a vowel would scarcely be used in any language to describe an island; rather as a diminutive, meaning little.

If the people of Mona were Gaelic-speaking people, then Mrs. Glynn-Ward is quite correct in calling the island "the Angle's Island," but whether they talked Gaelic or not the island is quite correctly named, as "the island in the Angle's Sea" or Irish Sea. That is where it is, is it not?

D. L. MORRISON.

AUGUST CELEBRATIONS

Sir,—The elaborate celebrations to be staged next month will directly benefit the whole of Greater Victoria, equally as much if not more than Victoria City proper itself.

Already there appears on the surface the usual "Let George do it" attitude, in this instance the Reeve of Oak Bay telling me that his municipality, (the richest in Canada), could not afford the expense of placing a municipal float in the parade to be staged on the above mentioned eventful occasion.

It is just this lack of unified interest generally, and particularly with regard to petty expense, such as shown here, that causes nearly all our attempts at wide publicity to fall flatter than the proverbial pancake.

Though not in touch with the residents of Oak Bay, as is the Reeve, I do not hesitate to say that they would show public spiritedness that were I to canvass them for the necessary cost to place a float in the coming parade they would gladly subscribe the amount ten times over.

This little reminder of unified public spiritedness will not come as a surprise to the Reeve. I've already promised it to him.

AMERICAN CUSTOMS

Sir,—We regret to state that the efforts made by the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau have been unsuccessful and the United States Government has amended the Customs Administration Act as affecting United States citizens returning to that country.

It will, as from July 25, be necessary for American citizens to have been absent from the United States for at least forty-eight hours for them to be allowed to take back into the United States $100 worth of goods free of duty.

Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau,
GEORGE I. WARREN,
Commissioner.

MINING LAWS

Sir,—A notice appeared in some of the papers a short time ago that the Government was contemplating offering the choice of some 2,900 mineral claims which had reverted back to it to those who would pay the deliquent taxes up to date on any that they might select. The remaining claims would be declared open for restaking.

Nearly 2,000 abandoned claims seems a goodly number even in such a large country as British Columbia, and it must be remembered that these were exclusively Crown granted ones. Just at the present time the claims held by first staking them, and by that means withheld from genuine prospecting must be many times that number.

What are considered good mining laws must be those which will be of the greatest help to the genuine prospector, and it appears as if the British Columbia mining laws filled this condition to the letter. But do they? Claims can be staked and held on the easiest terms, namely one month's assessment work in a year, or in lieu thereof a payment of $100. The claims are of a most generous size, four of them are bigger in area than an ordinary farming pre-emption, each one being 500 yards square. And the staker is at liberty to fill his pockets with powers-of-attorney and stake for a goodly number of his friends and relations.

At first sight the British Columbia mining laws look positively Utopian: but how do they work out in practice? Look at the new district of Zeballos, for instance. The original finds were made by a small group of fishermen, trappers, and prospectors. For two or three years they did, as every genuine prospector is prepared to do, that is, stayed on their ground and developed it to the best of their ability. Finally they proved its value sufficiently for it to be taken over by those with money who were in a position to develop the properties into producing mines. And now when this has been accomplished what has happened? The whole West Coast of the Island is overrun by stakes of whom probably not one in a hundred is a prospector. "Where the carcass is the vultures are gathered together." According to the papers the region for twenty miles around Zeballos is staked. This was a month or more ago, and probably by now far more territory is covered. With this in mind would a genuine prospector ever think of going to the district prepared to spend weeks or months carefully looking it over, knowing full well that any discovery he made would be in ground held by others? He would not be so foolish.

It is very likely that the insane section of the mining laws setting forth the farcical amount of assessment work and assessment fees required is more responsible for retarding the development of the mining districts of British Columbia than anything else. That a certain amount of leeway should be allowed to a man after staking a claim goes without saying. He should be given time to make preparations for properly prospecting it, but not eleven months in a year. And does the paymet of a fee on a claim prove in anyway that it is worth working? One would think that the main concern of the Government mining officials would be the development of prospects after they were staked, not the desires of stakers; and in that a real prospector would agree with them. But probably the framers of these laws were more preoccupied with the voting strength of those who favored laws of this stamp than any benefit to the country at large.

It is possible that if any changes for the better are ever made in the existing laws it will be by some return to the principles of the British Columbia mining laws. And the guiding principle of those was to get the ground worked, not to allow it to be used as a basis for speculation. The titles to a mining claim was only good as long as the owner, whether poor man or capitalist, continued to work it.—J. CARTMEL.

DIED AT NANAIMO

NANAIMO, July 16—Mrs. Mary Mordue, aged seventy-eight, resident of Nanaimo for the past twenty-five years died in the General Hospital following a brief illness.

Born in Northumberland, England, she is survived by one son, W. Mordue of Nanaimo postal service, two daughters, Mrs. M. Syer and Mrs. T. Mumberson, Nanaimo; two stepchildren, James Cowan, Chemainus, and Mrs. J. Dunsmore, Nanaimo.

Funeral services will be conducted at Jenkins Chapel on Monday afternoon. Interment in Nanaimo Cemetery.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

The closing exercises of the Vacation Bible School, which has been in session in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Victoria West, will be held Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. The programme features a demonstration of the work that has been done. The evening will close with a social time. The congregation, parents and friends of the children are invited.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

Calling Tenders—Fisher & Wilson, architects, are calling for tenders for a block of stores to be situated on the corner of Douglas and Johnson Streets, on the grounds owned by the Odd Fellows. Messrs. William Craft and Frederick Norris a short time since leased this ground for a term of years and will commence at once a block of four stores, two stories in height. No expense has been spared by them to make this a first-class building.

Pioneer Passes—Yesterday morning, there passed away, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Mrs. Jane Fydler Gowdy, who was one of the earlier settlers on this Island. Deceased was a native of Stramnes, Orkney Islands, and was aged seventy-four years. She came to Victoria a widow in 1858 with her daughter and son-in-law, William Spence, both of whom are living and highly respected citizens. She was married to Mr. Gowdy a short time after her arrival here and lived a quiet and peaceful life with him until his death in April last year. Always a kind-hearted person, she possessed many friends who are now called upon to mourn her loss.

Hotel Burned—On Tuesday afternoon, at 1 o'clock, the large three-story hotel at Port Moody, known as the Elgin House, was totally destroyed by fire. Only a little of the contents were saved, the flames spreading with fierce rapidity, and the heat rendering approach dangerous. The building had been erected for some years, and was very dry and inflammable.

Gives Reasons for Failure of British Everest Expedition

R. Oliver a severe cold, while Dr. C. B. M. Warren became his own first patient with a dose of flu. E. E. Shipton, too, was unwell.

After a traditional visit to the abbot at Rongbuk Monastery, a move was made to the old base camp near the estuary of Rongbuk Glacier, and on April 10 our forty-five Sherpas arrived from Sola and Khombu by way of the Nangpa Pass, giving us, with our Darjeeling men, a total of sixty porters. Of these, we retained for permanent use thirty-one; the other twenty-nine were dismissed with a gratuity.

CAMPS ESTABLISHED

On April 13, parties began relaying up the glacier in order to establish and equip the chain of camps. With the reduced number in porters, this meant three carriers to each camp, but we were a fortnight ahead of previous expeditions, and the coldness of the weather assured us there was no need for haste. Night temperatures of minus 2 degrees Fahrenheit at Camp I and minus 14 degrees Fahrenheit at Camp II were registered.

At Camp II, at 20,000 feet, I myself became the second victim of flu. On April 22, I went down to Rongbuk to recuperate. Ascending to Camp III on the twenty-sixth, I found the tents empty. All the Europeans were engaged in examining the North Col Slopes, and their subsequent report was a mixture of good and evil. They had been about three-quarters of the way up the ridge and had found ice enough to give them plenty of step-cutting. They thought that a fairly direct central route would "go"; on the other hand, they were of the opinion that the severe cold wind made an immediate occupation of the Col inadvisable.

PLANS FOR FINAL CLIMB

When discussing plans earlier at Camp II, my decision had been that Shipton and F. S. Smythe, as the most likely pair, should make an attempt on the peak in late May or early June, the period which, according to the records of past expeditions, offered the greatest chance of success. We had also decided upon an earlier attempt by N. E. Odell and Oliver. My infirmities had put me out of the hunt. Possibly an attempt by Warren and Peter Lloyd, carrying oxygen cylinders, might be made if the weather allowed, but it was realized there was grave risk of crippling an early assault in the severe conditions prevailing for the party. Chronic colds, coughs and sore throats were common complaints, so that a casual observer might have taken us for a party of consumptives enjoying a cold air cure.

The day after the reconnaissance of the North Col, Shipton, Smythe and Oliver, with nine porters, crossed the Pass Lhakpa La (22,300 feet) en route for the Kharta Valley, which stretches east of the Everest Massif and is watered by the Arun River. There, at a height of 11,000 [illegible] was much more chance of the party getting fit again than at Rongbuk at 17,000 feet. Rongbuk was dirty and dusty, and two days later bitter winds by day and temperatures of minus 15 degrees at night decided the rest of the party to follow them. We planned to return to the attack on Everest by the middle of May and left behind nine Sherpas to move Camp III a quarter of a mile up the glacier nearer to the ridge.

MONSOON BREAKS

This decision to retire, a four days' journey from and out of sight of the mountain, may in theory be open to criticism. In fact, we missed nothing by going down to Kharta and its comforts. Had we retired to Camp I or to Rongbuk, as alternatively we might have done, the time so occupied would have been five or six days. It was now April 29. On May 5 there was a heavy fall of snow on the mountain. Everest turned white and was not in condition again before the time we left.

This first burst of monsoon took an unusual course toward the Himalayas. Anyhow, what we called monsoon conditions were established over the Everest region. The northwest wind ceased and snow fell daily. The weather then became rapidly milder. The entire party except myself benefited greatly from the stay in the Kharta district, at the head of the majestic Arun Gorge, where there was grass to lie upon unlimited, wood to burn, flowers and trees, and sufficient medicine for high altitude coughs and colds. I, on the other hand, enjoyed a second and more prolonged bout of flu.

On May 10, I was able to walk, so five of us started back by way of the Pass Doya La, and Shipton and Smythe by way of the Lhakpa La. It was agreed they should meet us at Camp III on May 20. We reached Rongbuk on the fourteenth and were astonished, though dismayed, to see the mountain white over and a plume of cloud blowing off it before a southeast wind. We flattered ourselves that the northwest wind would soon reassert itself and that, before we were on the North Col, the mountain would be in condition again. One or two of us harbored the gloomy thought that the monsoon had started, but we only gave expression to this thought for the pleasure of hearing it laughed at.

Our party reached the higher Camp III on the eighteenth. On the glacier, which, at the end of April, had been bare of ice, a foot of snow now lay. Next day, Odell and Oliver examined the snow on the slopes of North Col and thought it "all right." On the twentieth, four of us started to make a route to the top of the ridge. Lloyd had to be left behind since he was sickening for the flu. Seracs (ice pinnacles) breaking off and pouring down many tons of ice just off our route might be construed as a delicate hint that we should use all possible caution.

Oliver, with two Sherpas, did most of the work in front, and when we caught him up he was about to embark upon a long and very steep snow traverse, which would obviously necessitate fixing a rope to make it safe for the porters. Less than a rope's length out, three of them got bunched together, and the snow at once broke into an avalanche, with the leading man just beyond the cleavage. The other two went down before the moving mass, but we easily held them from our end and brought them to safety.

Part of the traverse at least had thus been made safe, so Odell and I, well secured, pushed on and continued to make a track by fixing the rope. Shipton and Smythe, returning this day over the Lhakpa La, saw the party at work on the Col and were astonished, not indeed at our energy or enthusiasm, but at our foolhardiness. A foot of snow fell that evening.

UNCERTAIN AS TO WEATHER

Next day was devoted to an argument about the condition of the North Col slopes. Experience has shown that, after a break, these become dangerous. We were yet undecided whether monsoon conditions were really established, but a renewal of the northwest wind, for which we had hoped, would at the same time be a menace through the possible formation of "wind slab" conditions on the slopes as in 1936. We finally decided that Shipton and Smythe should go down and up the main Rongbuk Glacier to the west side of the Col in an attempt to force a route up that side, in case the weather prevented us from attempting a climb from the east.

Next day, however, the weather looked so much better that this move was cancelled, and two days later (May 24) we took twenty-six porters up and established Camp IV without mishap. On the twenty-fifth, Smythe and I took fifteen more porter loads up. However, there was now too much snow on the mountain for immediate action. Instead of fresh snow, high temperatures gave rise to more discussion among us as to what should be done. Shipton and Smythe, taking half the porters, were to force the west side of the North Col as originally planned. If they got up it successfully, and if conditions permitted, these two were to make an attempt on the summit.

Meanwhile, Lloyd having gone down to Rongbuk to recuperate, four of us, with five porters, on the twenty-eighth, occupied the North Col at Camp IV. Unfortunately, more snow fell and temperatures continued high. Having pushed up the ridge to about 24,500 feet in soft snow, we decided that nothing more could then be done.

ON WESTERN SLOPE

June 1 saw us back in Camp I. I went over to the camp higher up the main Rongbuk Glacier and had a talk with Shipton and Smythe, who, with Lloyd, were then on their way up the west side of the Col. The upshot of it was that I went on with them, leaving the remaining three members to collect more food from Rongbuk and from Camp III and follow us up as soon as they could. A strong west wind had blown for forty-eight hours, and we hoped it was clearing the mountain, but it was also probably making the east side of the Col dangerous, so both parties concentrated on the western slope.

On June 5, with sixteen porters, we made the route up to the Col from that side. But the route was not up to expectations and the earlier judgements of the 1921 and 1935 reconnaissances, which condemned it, must be upheld. In order to reach the slopes we crossed the debris of an avalanche of undreamt-of dimensions. On the dangerous east side, 500 feet up, there was an ice traverse unfair for laden porters. The remaining 1,000 feet were very steep. The snow was safe only before the sun had touched it.

On the following day we all pushed on up to Camp V (25,800 feet), and there Shipton and Smythe and seven porters were left in occupation. Next day but one, they established in eight hours Camp VI at 27,200 feet, just under the northeast shoulder of Everest, but they then had to send the tired porters down to the lower encampment. Their attempt to climb still higher next day was frustrated by thigh-deep powdery snow on the ledges. They, therefore, returned to Camp IV that evening. Meanwhile, Lloyd had moved up to Camp V. With two Sherpas, he and I climbed to Camp VI, Lloyd using oxygen. He went well, and, although having to "make" the route, he ascended from Camp V to Camp VI in three and a half hours, against my four. Considering the parties concerned, that may not be saying much for the oxygen.

THE "SECOND STEP"

On the eleventh we made an attempt to reach the "summit ridge," 300 feet above our camp, just west of the northeast shoulder. There was no chance of making the actual summit, but we wanted to reach and examine the so-called "second step," which figured in the accounts of previous expeditions and especially of that of 1924, when Leigh-Mallory and Irvine were lost. We found the rocks too steep to negotiate and defeat was hastened by a wind slight but perishing and, perhaps, by our own readiness to give in.

Back at Camp IV that evening we found that Odell, Oliver, Shipton, Smythe, and Dr. Warren had already gone down to Camp III, the last-named in charge of a pneumonia case among the Sherpas. Another Sherpa who had carried to Camp VI was lying here paralyzed by a stroke, and to get him down to lower levels alive seemed to be our next task, the more so since all hope of climbing the mountain was at an end.

REACHED 27,300 FEET

That we were thus successful in reaching a height of about 27,300 feet during monsoon conditions was, perhaps, something, but Shipton and Smythe, who have had more experience than anyone else of the mountain in fair conditions and foul, are convinced that in such conditions as we had to battle against the summit is unattainable.

This year, there was seemingly no lull between the Winter winds and the first heavy snowfall. Last year we were told that the situation was exceptionally favorable; in 1935 we saw for ourselves that the mountain was climbable to the end of June. What is wanted, therefore, is a succession of yearly expeditions. Now that we know that a small expedition can do what is necessary, such a succession of attempts becomes a possibility. An expedition smaller probably than the present one should, in my opinion, come out to the Himalayas every May. A favorable season will occur sooner or later, and I believe that we have mountaineers capable of taking advantage of it.

CHINESE RAISE AMBULANCE FUND

Machine Costing $1,500 to Be Purchased by Oriental Women's Committee Next Week

Realization of sufficient funds to allow immediate purchase of one complete ambulance unit to cost $1,500 was announced by Mar Leung, treasurer of the Chinese National Salvation Bureau, following a tea and dance given by the organization's women's committee.

Purchase of the ambulance marks the opening of a series of campaigns to be carried out across Canada under the auspices of the Canadian Friends of China Society, which opened a branch in Victoria recently, the treasurer said. The tea and dance was the direct result of a suggestion by Dr. D. M. Baillie, president of the group, that Victoria's Chinese lead the way in purchasing medical outfitting here.

Back from Vancouver, where, a week ago, he organized the nucleus of a Friends of China chapter, Joseph Hope, member of the Nationalist Bureau and well-known businessman, told members here that the movement in the Mainland city was gaining strength and that he hoped soon to have a second ambulance unit formed there. All ambulances bound for the front will be sent to the British authorities in Hongkong.

TRIP SEEN AS MOVE TO FORM NEW PARTY

No one expects Premier Hepburn or Premier Dupiessis to break down and confess their plans until the reaction of the astute Mr. Gardiner and the shrewd Mr. Pattullo is ascertained. But Ottawa is confident a new political party that will express Mr. Hepburn's and Mr. Dupiessis' antagonism to the King Ministry, as well as the aspiration of Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Pattullo, and not a view of the earth from the clouds is the impelling motive behind the air-mindedness of Mr. Hepburn.

Hepburn and Duplessis, it is claimed, are confident each can deliver forty Federal seats to a new political party, and believe Gardiner could gather enough strength in the West to convert the eighty seats from Ontario and Quebec into a majority in the Commons. Their friends insist that even if their expectations are overly optimistic, they would carry a bloc sufficient to prevent any other party securing a clear majority. In that position, they could barter their general support for concessions. On the other hand, the suggestion is they might try to drive right wings of both Liberals and Conservatives into union and open the way for a new liberalism such as Mr. Hepburn and Mr. Gardiner have envisaged, and which, it is said, Mr. Duplessis would actively support.

MONETARY REFORM

Mr. Hepburn considers the monetary platform of the Federal Liberal Party and that adopted at the recent Conservative convention to be too orthordox, but so far has not pinned himself down definitely to what reforms he might support.

Reports are that neither Hepburn nor Duplessis aspire for Federal leadership, and that Gardiner is their first choice. Just how far Mr. Gardiner would tag along with them remains to be seen until he has digested the proposition. If Mr. Gardiner proves disinterested, the idea for a new party will not be dropped, it is stated, but a search made for a new number one man.

TAKING ACTION TO END TIE-UP

Merchants of Ketchikan Undertake to Give Protection To Cannery Workers

KETCHIKAN, Alaska, July 16 (AP).—The week-old closure of salmon canneries here, ordered when Committee for Industrial Organization purse seiners refused offered prices, neared a climax tonight as 200 merchants and 800 American Federation of Labor seiners announced they would mass tomorrow to "take action" to end the tie-up.

Two hundred merchants signed an advertisement in a local newspaper stating they would gather tomorrow at the gates of two canneries to "guarantee protection" to any workers wishing to enter the plants.

Eddie Sukow, secretary of the A.F. of L. Seiners' local, said 800 A.F. of L. unionists, who have agreed to the offered fish prices, would gather in Ketchikan tomorrow to "take action."

Police ordered beer parlors and liquor stores closed tomorrow, to guard against violence.

FOSSIL BED IS NEW DISCOVERY

Scientists Find Ancient "Vein" Where Prehistoric Animals Once Roamed

This strike is just across the valley from the gold fields of '49, and it yields, not nuggets, but fossils.

University of California scientists have come across an ancient river bed where thousands of prehistoric animals were mired in quicksand and perished. Solidified and tilted on edge by some later convulsion of nature, the resulting sandstone now streaks across the landscape as a five-foot-wide "vein," and is being mined just as the Argonauts mined gold-bearing quartz.

The animal remains are probably 7,000,000 years old, says R. A. Stirton, curator of mammals in the university's museum of paleontology. This puts them in the Pliocene period, about 6,000,000 years before man is assumed to have appeared.

First hint of important deposits came in 1926, when Dr. B. L. Clark picked up prehistoric teeth on the site. The discovery was not followed up, and it was only when King Arthur Rickey, a research student, was assigned to work there that its full significance was revealed.

CANADIAN RIFLEMAN IS THIRD AT BISLEY

effort to become the first Canadian to win the classic since Lt.-Col. R. M. Blair, of Vancouver, triumphed in 1929. Only six Canadians have won since the match started in 1860.

Gregory, of Saint John, finished strongest in the whole field, scoring seven bull's-eyes in a row at the longest range of the shoot, the 1,000-yard distance, but Barlow was too far ahead.

Four other Canadians were in the King's final. Sgt. L. S. Vaines, of Montreal, with 278, was eighth, winning the M.R.A. Badge and $50 in cash. Captain T. E. Hayhurst, of Windsor, Ont., whose father, in 1895, was the first man from overseas to win the big match, finished thirty-fifth with 273, winning the badge and $15. The badge and $15 also went to Lieut. G. A. Molecey, of Vancouver, forty-third, with a score of 272, and Lieut. C. F. Kennedy, of Hilden, N.S., sixty-eighth, with a score of 269.

The King's Prize final marked the end of the fortnight's meeting during which the Canadians picked a team of eight men and captured the Rajah of Kolapore's Imperial Challenge Cup against teams from the Mother Country, India, Rhodesia, Jersey and Guernsey.

Besides the massive Kolapore trophy, the premier team event of the meeting, the Canadians will take back the Wimbledon Service Rifle Cup, won by young Lieut. Ewing, of Montreal. All other trophies eluded the marksmen from the Dominion.

WINS ST. GEORGE'S

Two of the Canadians made it close, however, when the St. George's Challenge Vase was decided Saturday. The winner was D. E. Brooks, of the British Army Service Corps, with a score of 74 out of 75 at the 900-yard range, and the veteran Company Sergt.-Major Emslie, of Toronto, and twenty-one-year-old Sgt. P. M. Gibault, of Vancouver, tied with three others for second place, all having 73's. In the shoot-off Emslie placed second to win the Silver Cross and $40, and Gibault third to win the N.R.A. Badge and $35.

Flying Officer G. Bunch, of the Royal Air Force, won the open grand aggregate, taking the challenge trophy, the N.R.A.'s Gold Cross and $50 in cash. The All-Comers' Aggregate, a challenge cup and $25 was taken by C. Laceby-Stevens, of India, with a score of 219.

VICTORIAN WELL UP

Lieut. Ewing, with 317, was fourth in the all-comers, winning $15, and was followed by Mrs. Gwen Spencer Hethey, of Victoria, finished sixth with 316 to win $15.

Lieut. Kennedy compiled 311 in this aggregate, which includes most of the major individual events of the meeting. Gregory also had 311; Sgt. P. M. Gibault, of Vancouver; Sgt. N. L. Beckett, of Hamilton, and Sgt. Vaines, of Montreal, 310 each, and Captain T. E. Hayhurst, of Windsor, 309.

RID TAMPA OF GAMBLING DENS

Merchants and Employees To Try Boycott to Shut Off Revenue

TAMPA, Fla., July 16 (AP).—Tampa businessmen turned to a boycott today as a new weapon against gambling.

One thousand merchants and their employees signed pledge cards promising to "rid" the city of commercialised gambling by shutting off the racket's revenue through boycott. They sought signatures of 10,000 additional employees, estimating one-half the revenue of illegal gambling establishments thus could be cut off.

William B. Haggerty, one-time drummer in a dance band and now manager of a cold storage plant, presented the plan to a mass meeting as an economic cure for the problem.

Gambling, he declared, "takes between $10,000 and $20,000 a day from business channels in Tampa."

SCOTLAND YARD EXPECTS BREAK

Detectives Indicate a Dramatic Turn in Wimbledon Murder Case

LONDON, July 16 (AP).—Scotland Yard detectives indicated tonight they anticipated a "dramatic development" leading to solution of the baffling "Irish Rose" murder.

Huge arches leading from the River Thames to Whitehall through Scotland Yard were closed to the public in an unusual precautionary move to keep idle inquirers away.

Detectives made a late night dash to Wimbledon, where the mutilated body of the brunette murder victim was found on Thursday beside the All-England Tennis Club.

Japan to Allow Gradual Return

WASHINGTON, July 16 (AP).—The United States State Department announced tonight Japan had promised to allow gradual return of Americans to their properties in Japanese-occupied Chinese territory.

Japanese authorities reserved the right, however, to decide whether actual conditions in any given area warranted the return of United States citizens there.

Has Ladies' Day In Police Court

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., July 16 (AP).—Bachelor Police Judge Ed Lake today decreed Tuesdays as "ladies' day" in his court to save women embarrassment of appearing at regular sessions to answer minor traffic charges.

He added, however, any woman arrested for drunken driving would have to take her punishment with other police court cases.

TESTS COMPLETED

DETROIT, July 16 (AP).—Capt. Alex Papana, Rumanian aviator, completed load tests today on the Detroit-built, twin-motored transport plane, in which he plans to make a 5,500-mile non-stop flight from New York to Bucharest next week.

Paying Brief Holiday Visit to Victoria

JOHN M. IMRIE

MANAGING director of The Edmonton Journal, who registered at the Empress Hotel yesterday, and will spend the week-end in the city. Mr. Imrie is on a holiday visit to British Columbia, his first since he was awarded a Pulitzer prize for his defence of the freedom of the press in Alberta.

City and District

Watch Stolen—Orville Ruston, 154 Robertson Street, informed police that his wrist watch had been stolen from a Yates Street service station.

Police Commission—Police salaries and matters concerning overtime pay will be discussed by the police commission at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Stolen Car—Police seek a 1937 coupe model automobile, licence number 45-102, stolen from M. A. Sinclair, Rossland, while he was staying at a local hotel.

Home Entered—Thieves who entered the premises of Col. A. W. R. Wilby at 1065 Moss Street through the conservatory ransacked drawers in several rooms. The entry was discovered by Constable W. D. Bone.

Newfoundland Picnic—The Newfoundland Society will hold a basket picnic in the afternoon and evening at the Willows Beach on Wednesday. All members and former residents are asked to attend.

Arion Club—The forty-sixth annual meeting of the Arion male voice club will be held on Monday evening at the residence of Thomas Kelway, corner of Pear and Thistle Streets, at 8 o'clock.

Saanich Conservatives—The postponed monthly meeting of the Saanich Conservative Association will be held on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the Campbell Building. The president will give a report on the convention recently held in Ottawa.

City Building—Ten building permits for construction valued at $12,155 were issued by the city building inspector's department during the past week. The permits included three new dwellings under construction at a cost of $9,600.

New Dwelling—Arthur H. and M. Rudge have secured a $2,700 city building permit to erect a five-room dwelling at 3015 Fifth Street. It will be constructed with cedar siding, and will have a basement garage and fir and oak floors.

Water Complaint—In a letter to the City Council, G. Blogg, Sooke, complained that two houses in the district were served by a single half-inch pipe from the water main with consequent low pressure.

Food Control—A letter received at the City Hall from William McGhee, 517 Government Street, complained about the high prices of meat, eggs and vegetables. He suggested the appointment of a city food controller.

Discuss Pasteurization—Without explanation yesterday, the Provincial Health Board issued a ten page pamphlet, summarizing opinions in favor of the pasteurization of milk. Added was a table of typhoid and other diseases said to have been borne by milk.

Provincial Court—In the Provincial Police Court, Friday, Carl P. Rudolph and John G. Newman, who had previously pleaded guilty to stealing five bags of fleece wool, were each sentenced by Magistrate Henry C. Hall to serve ten days in jail.

Mayor Invited—Mayor Andrew McGavin and Mrs. McGavin have been invited by the District Officer Commanding Military District No. 11 and officers of the garrison officers' mess at Work Point Barracks to attend an "at home" on the afternoon of July 27.

Is Remanded—Charged in the city police court Friday with "unlawfully selling potatoes in a manner otherwise than by the pound, contrary to the Food and Fuel, Weights and Measures Act," Chan Yat pleaded not guilty through F. C. Elliott, defence counsel. The Chinese was remanded until July 21 for trial.

Date Set—Trial of Idiris John Williams, charged with obtaining $10 by false pretences from Charles Lewis, was set for July 2 when he appeared on remand in the city police court Friday. Chares Lewis, charged with assaulting Idiris John Williams, was also remanded until July 22.

Estimating Competition—Owing to members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce celebrations committee being engaged with the entertainment in Royal Athletic Park, the winner of the week's estimating competition in connection with the "Miss Victoria" contest was not decided last night.

Tag Day Results—Total collections from the tag day held here yesterday by members of the Canadian Pensioners' Association reached $250, Secretary-Treasurer R. Keane announced. Thanks were extended by president Samuel Saunders to the general public and the fifty-one taggers for their interest and support.

Is Remanded—Charged with stealing a case of medical instruments and a case of narcotics from the automobile of Dr. Hermann M. Robertson, Frank C. Wilson was remanded without plea until Monday when he appeared in the city police court yesterday morning. Wilson was sentenced on Friday to serve one year in prison with a fine of $200 for the possession of narcotics.

Man Sought—City police have been asked to keep a lookout for Forrest "Fritz" Burrill, superintendent of the Ralph L. Smith Lumber Company, Portland, Oregon, who disappeared on June 8. When last seen he was driving an automobile with Oregon licence plates number 163-922. The missing man is described as thirty-nine years of age, five feet nine inches tall, 170 pounds in weight, and has brown eyes and a clear tanned complexion.

Building Proceeding—Work is proceeding on the new Provincial police barracks and traffic testing station at Vancouver, with the foundations of the $169,000 structure already in. Provincial architects said yesterday. Carter, Halls & Aldinger have the contract, covering a one and two story building, with accommodation for the Vancouver post of the Provincial force, drivers' examination equipment, and other Provincial offices.

Entrance Results Expected—Announcement of high school entrance examination results throughout the Province may be made by the British Columbia Department of Education about the middle of this week. Tabulation of the results was nearing completion yesterday at the Legislative Buildings. Junior and Senior Matriculation and Normal Entrance results will be announced later, probably towards the end of this month.

Autos Collide—An automobile driven east on May Street by John Thompson, Bamberton, was in collision with a car proceeding south on Linden Avenue, driven by William Halliday, at 5:15 yesterday afternoon. The force of the collision caused the Thompson machine to strike the curb on the south side of May Street and turn over. No one was hurt, but considerable damage was done to both cars, police reported.

Premier Asks Action—Premier Pattullo circularized six of the nine departments of the Provincial Government yesterday, asking for action in connection with development of Provincial services for British Columbia's new village at Zeballos. The Premier reiterated during the day his admiration for those pioneering in the West Coast goldfield, and repeated the Province's desire to encourage the settlement by every reasonable means.

Mayor's Conference—Mayor Andrew McGavin received word yesterday that Mayor George C. Miller, Vancouver; Mayor Joseph Carson, Portland, and George W. Vance, commissioner of North Vancouver, will attend the Pacific Northwest Conference of Mayors here on August 4. Mayor Arthur B. Langlie, Seattle, will be unable to attend. Mayor Fred Hume, New Westminster, promised to visit the city for the meeting if duties permit.

Tour Parties Here—Two large tour parties from the United States registered at the Empress Hotel yesterday, to spend the week-end in the city. A Burlington tour, conducted by T. D. Fox, brought fifty-seven Chicago visitors to Victoria, and an American Express escorted tour of forty-two members, also from Chicago, was conducted here by C. C. Ilgard. The tourists will spend today sightseeing in and around Victoria, and will return to the Mainland tonight.

FIGHTING FIRES ON MANY FRONTS

land, thirty-five men are fighting a fifty-acre fire. Near Garibaldi Park, thirty-five men are fighting fire reported by the Garibaldi Park outlook station. On Gabriola Island a small fire is now under control. On Grouse Mountain, North Vancouver, a three-day blaze has been checked and is now reported out. These and other fires are all being watched for fresh outbreaks, due to the dryness of the bush.

LOW HUMIDITY

Humidity gauges, low all week, stayed below the danger point, especially in southern parts of the province. North on Vancouver Island there was a rise in the moisture content of the air and some promise of early relief.

Summarizing the situation as a whole, Mr. Manning declared the province was facing the worst fire test of this season, with every need for caution on the part of the public, so that existing outbreaks will not be increased. Operations chiefs of the Provincial Forest Service were flown by airplane to Campbell River yesterday, to take charge of 750 men on the ground.

(Special to The Colonist)

CAMPBELL RIVER, July 16.—Although the fire is still burning west of here, it is in the slashings beyond Forbes Landing, and traffic as far as Campbell River is not interfered with. It is only between Campbell River and Forbes Landing that the roads cannot be used. The fire is eight miles from Campbell River and is moving in the other direction.

RISING HUMIDITY

SEATTLE, July 16 (AP).—Fog, cooler weather and slowly-rising humidity aided thousands of weary forest fire fighters tonight in the United States Northwest.

The humidity rose to 81 here early today, only five points below normal, as 250 loggers, state wardens and volunteers continued their battle against the Toandos Peninsula forest fire, still threatening Summer homes and small farms on that neck of land in Hood Canal.

The Toandos fire definitely was controlled, but fire guards watched for new outbreaks tonight. Two Thorndyke Bay settlers' homes and six donkey engines were burned, and loggers estimated 90 per cent of all the felled and bucked timber, about 60,000,000 feet, was destroyed. Big green timber was not badly damaged.

FIRE FIGHTERS GAIN

Heavy fog settled as the brisk winds died in Ryderwood area, off Southwestern Washington, where 400 fire fighters reported "real gains" against a 20,000-acre blaze in logged-off land and green timber.

State foresters reported about 200 fires in the Pacific Northwest and about 2,000 men on the fire lines.

All available manpower in Mount Baker National Forest was rushed to a blaze, out of control on the Cascade River, near Marblemount. It was reported in green timber.

East of the Cascades, conditions still were critical in the Wenatchee National Forest. Superintendent Gilbert D. Brown said he contemplated closing some areas to tourists. He augmented his regular force of sixty-two mountain-top lookouts to eighty as smoke from the west side of the range cut visibility to "almost nothing."

ACUTE IN OREGON

PORTLAND, Ore., July 16 (AP).—Oregon's forest fire situation remained acute today, although increased humidity and slightly lower temperatures eased conditions in most areas.

Most serious fire in the state was the 2,000-acre Smith River blaze in Northwestern Douglas County. A four-mile fire line on the west side of the blaze was successful in holding it in check today as improved weather conditions gave hope that the danger of spread had passed.

There were still approximately 800 men fighting the fire, but a few were withdrawn to aid on other localities.

All but four of the 100 fires in the Siskiyou National Forest were reported under control.

SUCCESSFUL PICNIC HELD AT DEEP COVE

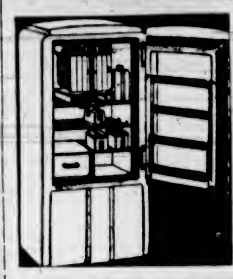

A very successful picnic and sports day was held yesterday at Deep Cove by the Pro Patria Branch of the Canadian Legion. An estimated crowd of between 700 and 800 persons were present, and the well-arranged sports programme attracted a large number of contestants. During the day a buffet lunch was served, and ice cream, candy and soft drinks were supplied all afternoon. The outing was in charge of J. P. J. Collins, and others on the committee included A. E. Hull, B. Ripley, W. Talbot, T. Kirk, W. Morry, D. Randell, H. Gandy, E. Hall and J. Williams.

Seeding Grass To Stop Erosion

SPOKANE, Wash., July 16 (AP).—Bunch grass from the United States Pacific Northwest is going to battle against erosion in the dust bowl of the Great Plains, the soil conservation service said here today.

Fifty men, the service said, are at work harvesting 10,000 pounds of seed. Most of it will be shipped to Central States for planting, with a small portion saved for erosion districts of the Northwest.

Couple Will Make Home In Victoria

DUNCAN, July 16. — At St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church a pretty wedding was celebrated this afternoon, when Doris Marguerite, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Dunkeld became the bride of Mr. Arnold C. (Tony) Radford, second son of Mrs. Violet Radford, Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex, and the late A. D. Radford, Duncan, with Rev. E. Barnes officiating. The church was beautifully decorated by girl friends of the bride, delphiniums and peach colored gladioli being effectively used. Miss M. Holway was at the organ, and during the signing of the register Mr. A. E. Robinson sang.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a wedding gown of white lace over white satin, made tight fitting, and ending in a small train. She wore a silk net veil held in place by a wreath of lilies, and carried a sheaf of white calla lilies. Her two bridesmaids were pretty in frocks made in similar style, Miss Kathleen McIver wearing peach-colored net and Miss Dorothy Owen wearing blue. They wore attractive halo hats, and carried colonial bouquets in pastel shades. Mr. David Radford, of Victoria, was best man, and the ushers were Wallace and Donald Dunkeld.

WEDDING RECEPTION

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The home was decorated with a profusion of Summer flowers arranged in tall baskets. Mrs. Dunkeld, the bride's mother, received the guests in a smart model gown of navy crepe de Chine with a matching coat of sheer, white hat and accessories and corsage bouquet of pink rosebuds. Mrs. A. J. Castle and Mrs. H. W. McKenzie presided at the tea and coffee urns and Misses Clara Whidden, Pat Mowbray, Christine McKenzie, Queenie Kennett, May Toombs, Lois Leeming and Rona McDonald assisted in serving. The toast to the bride was proposed by Mr. Castle.

Among the out-of-town guests invited were Mr. and Mrs. David Radford, Mr. and Mrs. D. Fletcher and Misses D. and J. Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. L. Wilkes, Mr. and Mrs. V. Leigh, of Victoria, and Mr. B. Stewart, of Vancouver.

Many beautiful wedding presents were received by the bride and groom. Mr. Radford is on the staff of The Victoria Daily Times, and Mrs. Radford had been on the local staff of the B.C. Telephone Company.

After a honeymoon spent in Seattle and Portland, Mr. and Mrs. Radford will make their home in Victoria. Mrs. Radford traveled in a most becoming frock of new blue with dusty-pink bolero, blue felt hat, fawn coat and fawn accessories.

RETURN FROM HONEYMOON

NANAIMO, July 16—Mr. and Mrs. Timmins, married in Seattle on July 6, have returned from their honeymoon trip in Sound cities and Southern points, and have taken up residence at their Summer home at Duke's Point, Cedar. Mrs. Timmins, formerly Miss A. Randle, is the daughter of Mrs. Oliver Randle, old-time resident of the Five Acre lots, and the late Oliver Randle.

CHURCH CHOIR PICNIC

The annual picnic of Metropolitan United Church choir will be held at the Summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Knott, Langford Lake, on Wednesday afternoon next. Cars will leave the church at 2.30 o'clock.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

VICTORIA

The annual basket picnic of the Victoria W.I. will be held at Saseenos on Friday. Members will meet at the Coach Lines depot at 10 a.m., and reservations should be made early. Further information may be obtained by telephoning Mrs. Walt, Garden 7898, or Mrs. Briscoe, Empire 1506.

SHAWNIGAN LAKE

Eighteen members were present at the regular monthly meeting of the Shawnigan Lake Women's Institute held in the S.L.A.A. Hall on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. G. Orr, president, occupied the chair. An invitation was conveyed to the Institute to attend the annual service in the recreation field on Sunday, July 24, sponsored by the Malahat branch of the Canadian Legion. Committee reports included a detailed account by Mrs. F. M. Gannon, showing the progress made toward the proposed recreation centre. A discussion of Institute plans for gala day resulted in a decision to hold a home-cooking stall with a game of darts and a "spinning-Jenny" as added attractions. Mrs. G. Orr and Mrs. W. Batchelor were chosen as stall conveners. A comprehensive report of the recent convention in Vancouver was given by the president, Mrs. Orr, who attended as delegate. Tea was served by Mrs. W. Broocke and Mrs. E. G. Gibson.

Weddings

PLOWMAN—RYLES

Marguerites, jasmine, gladioli and larkspur, intermingled with greenery, were used in decoration of St. Alban's Church for the marriage of Florence Ivy, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Ryles, 2215 Fernwood Road, and Mr. Roy James Plowman, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. Plowman, which was solemnized at 8 o'clock last evening, Rev. F. Comley officiating.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a white silk suit with a blue organdie vestee, a white off-the-face hat, tied at the back and worn with a veil over her face. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and carnations.

Miss Winnifred Ryles, in an old rose bolero frock of silk crepe, and Miss Iris Ryles, in mauve, were their sister's bridesmaids. Their off-the-face hats and accessories matched their frocks, and they carried bouquets of gladioli and sweet peas. The bride's brother-in-law, Mr. Archie MacBride, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. James Davidson and Mr. Leslie Graham. Bows of white ribbon, centred with sprigs of jasmine, marked the guest pews.

Mrs. D. Swan presided at the organ, and the hymn "Lead Us, Heavenly Father, Lead Us" was sung during the service.

A reception was held later at the home of Mr. and Mrs. MacBride, Caledonia Avenue, where the guests were received by Mrs. Ryles in a floral silk dress and white accessories, assisted by the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. C. Jasper, in navy blue with dusty-pink accessories, who both wore corsage bouquets of roses and carnations.

A large silver basket filled with flowers centred the supper table, which was covered with a handsome lace cloth, and on a smaller table the bride cut the cake which stood between vases of flowers behind a miniature bride and groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Plowman will make their home at Port Alberni. Mrs. J. Sangster, Vancouver, a sister of the bridegroom, was a guest at the wedding.

Among the gifts were a silver flower basket, from the permanent guests at the Y.W.C.A., where the bride had been a member of the dining-room staff, and a case of table silver from the kitchen and dining-room staffs.

PELLETT—MacDONALD

Rev. B. H. Wallace officiated at the marriage of Miss Frances MacDonald, daughter of Mrs. F. Smart, Vancouver, and of the late Mr. A. MacDonald, and Mr. Albert Pellett, son of Mrs. H. Earl, Centre Road, and of the late Mr. J. Pellett, which took place last evening at the home of the bridegroom's mother. During the ceremony the bridal couple stood under a floral arch, supper being served later from a flower-bedecked table centred with the wedding cake.

The bride was given in marriage by her stepfather, and wore a frock of turquoise blue chiffon, with matching accessories. Attending her were the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. K. Beaveridge, in a frock of peach net, with accessories en suite, and her own sister, Miss Violet MacDonald, in blue lace. All three wore corsage bouquets of roses. Mr. Frank Pellett supported his brother. Relatives and a few friends were present at the wedding.

After a motoring trip in the Northern States, Mr. and Mrs. Pellett will make their home at 200 St. Charles Street. For traveling, the bride donned a brown and white check tailored suit.

A presentation of an electric toaster was made on Friday to Mr. Albert Pellett on the eve of his marriage, as a token of the esteem of his fellow-workers and friends at Ross Bay Cemetery. Best wishes for a happy life went with the gift.

BAIRD—BURGESS

A quiet wedding was solemnized on Tuesday evening at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. Daniel Walker, 1133 Rockland Avenue, when Miss Edith Jean Marie Burgess, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Burgess, Wilkinson Road, became the bride of Mr. Thomas David Baird, son of Mrs. A. Baird and the late Mr. T. Baird, of Port Renfrew. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a becoming powder blue silk afternoon dress with white trimmings, a white coat, white pattern hat in an off-the-face style and white accessories. She was attended by Miss Eleanor Carr as bridesmaid, and both wore corsage bouquets of roses. Mr. Cyril C. Burgess, brother of the bride, was the best man. A reception for relatives and intimate friends was held at the home of the bride's parents, where Mrs. Burgess, in a becoming white and navy ensemble, and Mrs. Baird, in a plum-covered costume with matching accessories, welcomed the guests. Both wore corsage bouquets of pink carnations and maidenhair fern. The room was decorated with a profusion of Summer flowers and a three-tier wedding cake centred the bride's table. Mr. and Mrs. Baird will make their home at Port Renfrew.

MONTI—MAGGIORA

Mr. and Mrs. John Maggiora, of the Gorge Hotel, announce the marriage of their only daughter, Nelda, to Raglonlere Filippo Monti, of Torino, Italy. Miss Maggiora is a native daughter of Nanaimo, and has been visiting in Italy where the marriage took place recently.

CUNNINGHAM—BARKER

The marriage took place at St. Luke's Church, Cedar Hill, yesterday, of Mr. John Scudamore Cunningham, second son of Rev. T. S. Cunningham, to Madge Robertson Barker, eldest daughter of the late J. Herrick McGregor and Mrs. McGregor, Cadboro Bay.

MRS. E. KENNETH DAWSON

THE former Miss Jean MacKenzie Turner, only daughter of Mrs. M. B. Turner, Victoria, was married at Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto, on June 25, to Dr. E. Kenneth Dawson, of Chesley, Ontario. Dr. Dawson is the son of Mrs. W. Dawson and the late Mr. W. Dawson, St. Mary's, Ontario. Rev. Dr. H. H. Bingham conducted the ceremony in the presence of relatives and a few other intimate friends. A reception was held at the University Club, St. George Street, from which the bride and groom left to spend their honeymoon in the Berkshires and Adirondacks. They will live in Chesley.

The wedding is of considerable interest in British Columbia, the bride being a native of Kaslo, and having received her early schooling in Nelson and Victoria. She also studied music in Victoria under the late Miss Marian Heming. For the past few years she has been commercial art specialist in the Western Technical School, Toronto.

Royal Oak Scouts Hold Garden Party

A successful garden party was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. H. W. Bassett, West Saanich Road, in aid of the Royal Oak Company of Boy Scouts. The affair was opened at 2.30 p.m. by Reeve William Crouch, and during the afternoon music was supplied by Rowles Boys' Band. Mr. V. E. L. Goddard, Scoutmaster, impressed upon them the necessity of learning and living the Scout law. Among the amusements was a wheel of fortune, conducted by Mrs. P. M. Monckton, and housie-housie by Mr. Roberts and Mr. Huck. Tea was served by Mrs. L. H. MacQueen and Mrs. Hayward, while Mrs. Willoughby sold candy and superfluities; Mr. Willoughby, ice cream, and the Royal Oak Cubs sold the soft drinks.

DANCE AT EMPRESS HOTEL

Victoria may have had its hottest spell for years, but that made no difference to the gaiety of the supper dance at the Empress Hotel last evening when a holiday crowd from far distant points and the "younger local set" danced to new swing played by the Empress orchestra, Mr. W. F. Tickle conducting. High spots of the programme were "I Let a Song Go Out of My Heart"; Flat Foot and Toogie," and "Eight Little Notes."

HIGH RATE

Jones had just returned from the first run in his new car. His wife had accompanied him.

"Hullo, old man," said his next-door neighbor. "How's the car going? What d'you get out of her?"

"I should think about twenty thousand words to the gallon," replied Jones, wearily.

A party of West Vancouver Townswomen's Guild members visited Victoria, Friday. Following a visit to the Archives and the Legislative Chamber, the party drove round the city and then to Esquimalt, where they were entertained to tea by Mrs. Tyrell Godman prior to leaving for home at 6 o'clock.

Clubs-Societies

Qu-Alex Girls' Club

The W.B.A. Qu-Alex Girls' Club held its July meeting at the home of Mrs. A. Barraclough, Cochrane Street, with Mrs. M. Thorstenson and Mrs. A. Barraclough acting as hostesses. The club decided to hold a theatre party and dinner on August 19. The next meeting will be on the third Friday in September, at the home of the Misses Kathleen and Marjorie Bowden, 1034 Southgate Street. Miss Helen Atack will bring the mystery box. During the evening Miss Gladys Brandt was welcomed as a visitor from California. Prizes for contests were won by Misses Florence Malcolm and Marjorie Bowden, while Mrs. M. Thorstenson won the "Mystery Box." Later refreshments were served from a prettily appointed table which was centred with a silver vase of blue delphiniums. The "lucky cup" was won by Miss Winnie Graham. A one-minute silence was observed for Miss Annie Hildebrand, a member of the club who passed away last Thursday night.

Chemainus Hospital W.A.

A short business meeting of the Chemainus Hospital Auxiliary was held recently at the home of the president, Mrs. C. McInnis. Final arrangements were made for the purchase of a cedar chest, to aid with general funds. Donations for the contents of the chest will be gladly received by Mrs. Heslip. After discussion, it was also decided to again hold the flannel dance, early in August, and endeavors are being made to hold it on August 12. Miss Whittaker, the new hospital matron, and Mrs. Norman Dick, the doctor's bride, were welcomed, and a social hour followed, tea being served on the lawn. Assisting the hostess were Mesdames Oliver, Mainwaring and Wyllie. Mrs. McInnis, during the tea, presented Mrs. Dick with a beautiful white and gold table lamp, on behalf of the auxiliary members.

Chemainus W.A.

Several members of St. Michael and All Angels' Branch of the W.A. attended a joint meeting, with Crofton and All Saints' Branch, at the home of Miss B. Foster. The president, Mrs. Bailey, welcomed the guests, after which Miss Foster gave an enlightening and instructive talk on the work done by the W.A., at home, in the Dominion, and abroad. She especially explained the use to which several of the funds are placed, and the necessity for the pledges for these funds to be maintained, in order to carry out the purpose planned. Tea was later served on the lawn.

TODAY'S RECIPE

SUMMER Delight—One-half cup orange juice, one-half cup lemon juice, one and one-fourth cups simple syrup, one-half cup green tea infusion, ice, one pint loganberry or grape juice, one pint ginger ale, fresh mint, rind of one cucumber.

Method: Mix orange and lemon juices with syrup and tea and strain over cracked ice or cubes. Add loganberry juice and ginger ale. Garnish pitcher or glasses with thin strips of washed cucumber rind and mint leaves. This makes a little over a quart.

The "simple syrup" is made as follows: Eight cups sugar, four cups water, one-fourth teaspoon salt.

Method: Boil together for five minutes, stirring only until sugar dissolves. Cool, and keep in covered jars under refrigeration. This will keep for some time and makes a smoother beverage than one sweetened with undissolved sugar.

She's Now Six Years Old

ROSEMARY NADINE ELLIS

Who celebrated her sixth birthday on July 14, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Ellis, Princess Avenue; granddaughter of Mrs. M. V. Ellis, Pembroke Street, and Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McKillican, Sidney, B.C.

Impressed by Many People In Old Land

Mrs. Dorothy White, who, with her son, Godfrey, has just returned from an extended stay in England, had the interesting experience, while there, of working for a few months on the committee of non-intervention in Spanish affairs at the Foreign Office. This committee, of which Lord Plymouth was chairman, was being disbanded about the time she left, but had experienced a very busy period.

Mrs. White, who had memories of England during the late war years and, immediately after, when she was employed at the British Admiralty, noticed on her recent visit to the Old Land a great apparent increase in the number of people everywhere, during recent months this number being noticeably supplemented by continental peoples, including many Jews, evidently from Germany.

A member of the Victoria branch of the Dickens Fellowship for three or four years before she returned to England, she seized the opportunity while there to visit many of the old Dickens' haunts, including Gadshill, Dover, Blackheath and other spots.

Back in Canada she stopped several weeks in Toronto before starting West, and there made contact with the Dickens' Fellowship, the largest in Canada, with an approximate membership of 1,000. She also spent a short time at Banff and Lake Louise en route back to Victoria.

Miss Hilda Allen Bride Of Mr. Stanley Wickett

Pretty Wedding Solemnized Yesterday Afternoon At St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay—Couple Leave For Trip to Saskatoon—To Reside Here

St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay, was the scene of a pretty wedding yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, when Hilda Winnifred Allen, only daughter of Mrs. T. G. Rayfuse, 71 Wellington Avenue, and the late Mr. Allen, became the bride of Mr. Charles Stanley Wickett, second son of Mr. and Mrs. F. T. C. Wickett, 1560 Monterey Avenue, in the presence of a large number of friends. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion by the ladies of the choir.

The service which was fully choral was conducted by Ven. Archdeacon Nunns. Mr. F. T. C. Wickett presided at the organ and during the signing of the register, accompanied his eldest son, Mr. Dudley Wickett, who sang "O Father, All-creating."

LOVELY BRIDE

The bride, entering the church on the arm of her step-father, Mr. Rayfuse, was preceded by the choir boys singing "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden." She looked charming in an ivory moire gown made with a short train, with fine pleating at the throat and wrists. A wreath of orange blossoms held in place her veil of lovely old Brussels net, which belonged to Mrs. F. T. C. Wickett, and her shower bouquet was of bridal roses. She wore a pearl and cameo necklet, which belonged to her mother.

The bride's attendants, Miss Helen Wells and Miss Mary Nelson, wore gowns of violet and peach ninon de soie respectively, fashioned in Empire style, and carried bouquets of mauve and peach sweet peas. Their head-dresses were garlands of matching flowers with short veils.

The best man was Mr. George Beveridge, and the ushers were Mr. Percy Wickett and Mr. Roy Wilcox, brother and cousin of the groom.

RECEPTION HELD

After the service, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The happy couple received their friends, standing beneath an arch of roses. Assisting in receiving the guests were the bride's mother, Mrs. T. G. Rayfuse, wearing a full-length gown of blue lace with a blue picture hat and corsage bouquet of sweet peas, and Mrs. F. T. C. Wickett, mother of the groom, wearing a gown of grey georgette with a black and white picture hat and a corsage bouquet of carnations.

Refreshments were served from a table beautifully decorated with a lace cloth and centred with rosebuds in silver vases. The three-tier wedding cake was cut by the bride, following a toast proposed by Archdeacon Nunns.

LEAVE FOR SASKATOON

Mr. and Mrs. Wickett left on the afternoon boat for Seattle, motoring to Saskatoon, via Banff. For traveling the bride wore a beige ensemble with luggage tan accessories and a corsage bouquet of rosebuds.

Among the many lovely presents were an occasional chair and hassock to match presented to the groom by his fellow-employees at F. W. Woolworth Co. and an electric chimes clock from the B.C. Electric, where the bride was employed. The presentation of the clock was made last week by Mr. F. F. McKitrick, on behalf of the staff of the Douglas St.deet branch.

The out-of-town guests included Mrs. William Rippengale and Miss Kay Rippengale, Saskatoon; Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox, Miss May Wilcox, Mr. Roy Wilcox, Miss Dora Miller, Mr. Austin Dinnick, all of Vancouver, and Mr. and Mrs. Farwell and Miss Joan Farwell, Duncan.

CLEAN

Modern Gas Ranges Are as Easy to Keep CLEAN as a China Plate . . .

Clean because the possibilities of food boiling over are practically eliminated. Modern Gas Ranges have new simmer burners which allow just enough heat to keep water gently boiling, yet not enough to boil over. Use fast, intense heat to bring to a boil, then turn to "simmer" and forget it.

Clean because you no longer need to broil in the oven. Broiled foods are more healthful than fried foods, so Modern Gas Ranges have separate broilers designed to eliminate "spattering fats"—to eliminate smoke—to make broiling one of the easiest and cleanest of cooking operations.

Clean because every Modern Gas Range is full porcelain enameled, presenting a smooth, gleaming finish, as easy to keep clean and as lustrously beautiful as any appliance you possess. Modern gas cookery is clean—yes—and carefree. Is your range modern? If not, visit our Showrooms TOMORROW. You'll find that a Modern Gas Range will pay for itself with its savings.

Illustrated above is one of the smartest of the new Gas Ranges—the 1938 Wedgewood, a gas range you would be proud to own. Come in to our Douglas Street Showrooms and see the fine new gas range models, with their time and labor-saving improvements.

Held Reception

More than fifty guests attended the reception held yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Elwood Luney, the former Miss Mona McDonald, at her home, 1009 Hampshire Road, the first held since her marriage. Mrs. Luney, wearing her beautiful satin wedding gown, was assisted in receiving the guests by her matron of honor, Mrs. M. F. Hunter, who wore a blue accordion-pleated chiffon frock with bolero and blue picture hat. The reception rooms were beautiful with Summer flowers, and in the living room the fireplace was banked with Oregon grape, hydrangea and pink American Pillar and Dorothy Perkins roses, and at each side were tall baskets of hydrangea and pink American Pillar roses and a tall glass vase of similar flowers stood in the centre. At either side of the mantelpiece were silver vases of sweet peas. The tea table, covered with a lace cloth and centred with a blue glass vase filled with blue and pink sweet peas and maidenhair fern upon a mirror centrepiece, and flanked by pink and blue tapers in pink crystal holders, was presided over by Mrs. William Luney and Mrs. A. McDonald. Young friends of the bride assisted in serving.

To Be Hostess

A farewell tea is being given this afternoon by Miss Ethyl Aitken, Linden Avenue, who is leaving on Tuesday for London, Ontario, where her marriage to Mr. Charles Lampkin will take place shortly after her arrival. Pastel-colored sweet peas and red roses have been effectively used in decorating the reception rooms. Mr. William Newcombe and Miss Alice Findler will preside at the tea table whose adornments will carry out a yellow and green color scheme. The servitors will be Mrs. O. E. Day, Miss Laura Catterall and little June Day. Invitations were extended to Mrs. N. Collins, Mrs. W. Bromley, Mrs. J. Wallace, Mrs. R. Pillyer, Mrs. Jesse Sangster (Vancouver), Mrs. Stuart Robertson, Mrs. Ina Catterall, Mrs. Hazel McLennan, Mrs. W. Dillabough, Mrs. W. Sturrock, Mrs. M. Wetmore, Mrs. J. Craig, Mrs. Hood, Mrs. T. Catterall, Mrs. F. Bradshaw, Mrs. J. Wallace, Sr., Mrs. G. McKenzie, Mrs. G. Williamson, Mrs. W. Craven, Mrs. W. Newcombe, Mrs. O. E. Day, Mrs. A. M. Aitken and Misses Alice Findler, Laura Catterall, Gladys Townsend, Hazel Lawson, Ina Wallace, Grace Bowden, Dorothea Daniels, Nessie Wallace and June Day.

Miscellaneous Shower

Miss Pat Small and Miss Rita Keeler were hostesses at a miscellaneous shower held recently at Miss Small's home, 129 Ontario Street, in honor of Miss Edna Lackie, whose marriage to Mr. Hugh McIntyre will take place this month. The bride-to-be was presented with a corsage bouquet of pink carnations and was led to a decorated chair at the head of the table, beneath a prettily-arranged parasol, which was covered with Cellophane streamers. Orange lilies in silver vases were placed at the four corners of the table and yellow and green streamers hung from the chandelier. Prizes for games were won by Miss L. Chibree and Miss Rita Keeler. Refreshments were served by the hostesses, assisted by Mrs. W. Blain and Mrs. G. Harris. The invited guests were Mesdames H. McIntyre, W. Blain, H. Harris, L. Coomber, F. Barclay, D. Wyber, J. Lackie, T. Harris, B. Clayburn, L. Mannix, Misses J. Pettingell, L. McPhee, E. Maynard, T. Robertson, E. Baron, L. Chibree, Patsy Harris, B. Mannix, J. Murphy and P. Stanley.

Kitchen Shower Held

A kitchen shower was held recently at the home of Miss Margaret Stewart, 3611 Quadra Street, in honor of Miss Isabel Alexander, a bride-to-be. The gifts were presented in a clothes hamper which had been decorated to represent an old-fashioned lady in a blue and pink costume. The "lady" wore a carnation corsage bouquet, which was later worn by the guest of honor. After the gifts had been presented, games were played, the winners being Miss Isabel Alexander, Miss Nellie Styan and Miss Pat Cockell. Mrs. Fred Goodwin played several piano solos. Refreshments were served from a table centred by carnations and sweet peas in various shades of pink with pink tapers in silver candlesticks. The invited guests included Misses Katherine Alexander, Marion Alexander, Pat Cockell, Gladys Davies, Gertrude and Emily Durkin, Norma and Marjorie Ferris, Flossie Hughes, Jean Munro, Nellie Styan, Jennie Schwinn, Cora Wharton, Mrs. Fred Goodwin and Mrs. L. Birthday Celebration

About 100 friends of Mr. H. L. Salmon, of Brentwood, an old and well-known resident of Victoria, gathered in the private reception lounge of the Dominion Hotel on Friday afternoon, to extend their good wishes to him on the occasion of his eightieth birthday. Mr. Salmon came to Victoria from England in 1888, and has a host of friends here. Receiving the guests was Mr. Salmon's daughter, Mrs. M. M. Minchin, of Los Angeles, and her husband and two sons, Paul and Michael, who are here from the South to visit Mr. Salmon and are staying at the Cathay Hotel Apartments. Mrs. Adolph Lancaster, of Victoria, also assisted in receiving. Tea was served from a table attractively decorated with Summer flowers. In addition to many telegrams and letters conveying good wishes, Mr. Salmon received a handsome gold-mounted and engraved walking stick, presented to him by the members of Victoria-Columbia Lodge A.F. and A.M., of which he is a past master.

WILL PRESENT PARK CONCERT

Philharmonic Orchestra to Give Programme at Beacon Hill Wednesday

The Victoria Philharmonic Orchestral Society, under the leadership of Alfred Prescott, will give a concert in Beacon Hill Park, by permission of the City Parks Board, under the sponsorship of the B.C. Electric Railway Company, on Wednesday evening next, at 7:30 o'clock. The assisting artists will be Miss Winnifred Applegarth, soprano, and Thomas Crabbe, baritone.

This orchestra is composed almost entirely of young instrumentalists who have recently graduated from high school, who received instruction in orchestral playing while at high school, and who are now anxious to continue their orchestral work.

Since leaving school, they have voluntarily continued their orchestral practices, and have reached a high standard of efficiency and artistry, but until now have had little or no opportunity to play in public as a unit.

Through the personal interest of A. T. Goward, vice-president of the B.C. Electric Railway Company, such an opportunity has now been provided, and the public of Victoria is invited to hear them on the above date.

This concert, and possibly others in August, will be sponsored by the B.C. Electric Railway Company as a contribution towards the outdoor entertainment of the public at this season, and as an encouragement to young musicians in Victoria to follow up and perfect themselves in orchestral ensemble playing.

The following is the programme for Wednesday evening: "Marche Militaire" (Saint Saens); "Overture to Rosamunde" (Schubert); valse, "Gold and Silver" (Lehar); selection from "The Student Prince" (Romberg); intermezzo, "Wedding of the Rose" (Jessel); suite from "Carmen" (Bizet); three dances from "Henry the Eighth" (German); "God Save the King."

What Today Means

"CANCER"

If July 17 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:15 a.m., to 1:15 p.m.; from 3:15 to 5:15 p.m., and from 8:15 to 10:15 p.m. The danger periods are from 9:15 to 11:15 a.m.; from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m., and from 10:15 p.m., until midnight.

Keeping faith in big and little things this day will count the most. Your power of observation may be tested; any lack of attention to comments made in your presence, might lead to your being considerably embarrassed. Random remarks, tinged with sarcasm, are likely to be a prevalent failing that is apt to arouse much resentment. Conditions are conducive to making the average person stubborn should there be any opposition to his or her opinion regarding plans for social activities. It is advisable to avoid arguments as much as possible this day, for it is likely to be difficult to change any fixed ideas. Absent-mindedness will cause a needless amount of repetition, which might be very trying on nerves and temper. Married and engaged couples, and anyone with matrimonial aspirations, must avoid appearing to lack sentiment, for a display of thoughtfulness will make it a brighter and happier day.

If a women and July 17 is your birthday, you are very sympathetic and probably inclined to be sentimental. Good fortune should enable you to overcome any difficulties. You are likely to do something noteworthy. You might make the mistake of going about things too vigorously, particularly if it comes to laying down the law to anyone who has been careless. You have most likely, a vast amount of pride, which makes you rather sensitive. Skilful hands ought to enable you to do work of an artistic nature exceedingly well. As an artist, writer, musician, sales agent or teacher you may make an outstanding success of your life. You have, in all likelihood, all the qualities needed to make your married life exceptionally happy.

The child born on July 17, has an unusually good chance of becoming successful. With courage, a remarkable amount of perseverance and a creative mind this youngster's opportunities are likely to be unlimited.

If a man, and July 17 is your natal day, you might be inclined to go to extremes. Conservative one minute, you are apt to be decidedly reckless the next. As an architect, author, journalist, educator, naval or army officer, clergyman or banker your achievements may be outstanding.

MONDAY, JULY 18

"CANCER"

If July 18 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.; from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m.; from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., and from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m.

Thought, one of the principal controlling factors in human affairs, will be the means through which you may get good or bad results this day. Keep in mind friendly, kind-hearted, and constructive meditations, and these combined with an association of servicable ideas, should make this a happy day for you. Some people may have fancied or real grievances and a strong desire for retaliation. This is a poor day for any kind of revenge or to attempt in any way to pay off old scores. If you are wise you will start the day with a clean slate. Make allowances for the frailities of human nature and let bygones be bygones, if you desire a peaceful mind and a clear conscience. Married and engaged couples, and those who are in love, must be generously open-handed if they want to enjoy this day to the fullest extent.

If a woman and July 18 is your birthday, through a charming personality, self-confidence, and plenty of will-power, your way through life is apt to be comparatively easy. Your actions will be motivated largely by a desire to help others, and in this way, unknowingly perhaps, you will be helping yourself. Despite the confidence you might have in friends and business associates you must keep your eyes open, and be thoroughly businesslike during business hours. Never try combining business with friendship if you wish to avoid complications. As an actress, author, restaurant manager, teacher, musician, broker or artist your achievements may bring you both social and commercial rewards. You are likely to find your marital bonds delightfully easy to wear.

The child born on July 18, is frequently a dreamer, with the soul of a poet, and an artist's sense of appreciation. Children born on this date usually are successful.

If a man and July 18 is your natal day, you are probably happiest when you have work that absorbs you. Your powers of concentration will help you greatly if you apply them properly. As a scientist, politician, educator, author, salesman, publisher, printer or artist fame may come to you when you least expect it.

GOVERNMENT TO PROBE BETTING

Bootleg Bookies Operating in Vancouver Will Be Closed Out, It Is Stated

Bootleg betting in Vancouver provoked the British Columbia Government into a formal statement from the Treasury yesterday, warning that the province would use all its resources to conserve to the Crown the proceeds of the betting tax, Hon. John Hart issued the following statement:

"Information has reached the Department of Finance that 'books' are kept in the city of Vancouver and contiguous to the race tracks in connection with betting on the horse races. Steps are being taken to suppress immediately such practices."

The statement implied that the Government intended to stop bookies operating outside of supervised race meets, where the province exacts its pari-mutuel tax on all wagers." Pari-mutuel taxation runs into considerable sums in the Summer race season, even after deduction of the percentage rebated to race tracks for its collection on behalf of the Crown.

Bootleg betting operations, by telephone and otherwise, was said to have cut into Government revenues increasingly during the last few years.

ANNUAL BIBLE SCHOOL WILL OPEN TOMORROW

The Annual Bible Vacation School will begin sessions tomorrow at 9 a.m. in Metropolitan United Church. The school will be open during the mornings for the last two weeks of July. An able staff has been selected and will serve under the direction of Rev. John E. Bell, of First United Church. All children of school age are invited to attend.

The programme consists of Bible study, singing, handwork and organized play. A profitable and enjoyable time is assured to all children who attend.

The school usually has about seventy children under the direction of a staff of eight or ten. The school is inter-denominational.

A meeting of the executive of the newly formed Victoria branch of the Old Age Pension Association will be held on Tuesday at 2 p.m. at 1128 Mason Street.

Jane Dixon Says:

A ONE-SIDED LOVE IS NEITHER A GREAT NOR LASTING LOVE, TO BE SO IT MUST BE MUTUAL

There are those of us so weak-willed that, seeing our heartbreak ahead of us, we cling stubbornly to our want, telling ourselves we will "pay the fiddler" when he asks his price.

The trouble is that none of those who protest they will pay the price ever are ready to meet the bill when it falls due. They are the ones who cry out most vigorously against the injustice of the deal life hands them.

Dear Miss Dixon:

I've been working with a boy for five years, loving him all this time. He seems to have no intention of marrying, though he mentions many times that he will find himself a wife as soon as he saves enough money.

Every chance he gets, he makes love to me. I never did allow him to come to see me, but he dropped by many Sundays and stayed all day. Still I have a feeling he will never ask me to marry him for he has had so many good-looking girls.

At times when we are working he is very mean to me and later tells me he is sorry, then makes it up by being extra nice. I know just what to expect if I do marry him, but still I love him.

My problem is this: Another man wants me to marry him. He has a good job, money enough to start a good home, and he has an altogether different disposition. I am quite certain that he always would be on tip-toes to please me and would never say an unkind word to anyone, but I am afraid to marry him on account of loving the other one so much. I know I shall never find a better man than this one. I am in my late twenties and dread being an old maid. Please advise me. I'm so miserable and undecided.—Very Truly.

Comment: Since the young man has known you for five years, is making love to you at every opportunity and has not asked you to marry him now or in the future, it is fair to conclude he has no intention of doing so. Your stubborn devotion probably is like an old shoe to him. The tendency of human nature is to kick an old shoe around.

A one-sided love is not a great love. It is not a lasting love. To be real and to be lasting, it must be mutual.

A woman of your age and experience should have enough stamina to take her mind and her heart under some sort of sane control, and to concentrate on directing her life toward home and happiness.

It may be as you say, a woman loves only once, but be assured that she thinks she loves any number of times. The boy who works with you might be a habit. Why not determine to cure the habit?

Little Stories for Bedtime

A Fight That Was All for Nothing

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

Dreadful, dreadful, 'tis to fight!
If you do, be sure you're right.

Most fights are quite without excuse, and when they are over both sides are far worse off than they were in the first place, and quite as likely as not someone else has walked off with the prize. No, sir, it doesn't pay to fight unless it is to right a great wrong. Then it does, especially if it is to right a wrong done to someone less strong than you are and not at all able to fight for themselves.

But most fights are needless and foolish. For instance, take the case of Reddy and Granny Fox and Old Man Coyote. They quarrelled and fought over a dinner, and in the end—well, I'll tell you about it. Reddy Fox had found a piece of meat on the edge of the Green Forest left there for him by Farmer Brown's Boy. First, Reddy had suspected a trap, for he was not at all used to such kindness. When he found no trap he was still suspicious. Perhaps that meat had been poisoned. Not trusting his own nose he decided to take the meat home and let old Granny Fox decide if it were safe to eat. Then along had come Old Man Coyote and chased Reddy to rob him of that dinner, for Old Man Coyote was very, very, hungry. Granny Fox had appeared just in time to take the meat from Reddy and continue the race.

But Old Man Coyote did not give up. No, indeed! He isn't that kind. He ran faster than ever, if that were possible, and before long Granny Fox knew that she wouldn't be able to reach home before he would catch up with her. Now, Granny is not at all fond of fighting. She will run any time rather than fight. But if she must fight she will. This time she felt that she must. With food so scarce she simply could not allow Old Man Coyote to take a good dinner away from her without a struggle. So finding that he was sure to catch her, she wisely decided not to wait until she was quite out of breath and too tired to fight. Quite suddenly she stopped running and faced Old Man Coyote. She knew that she was no match for him, but Reddy Fox was not far behind, and perhaps Old Man Coyote would not dare to fight both of them at once.

He snarled in his ugliest way at Granny, hoping to frighten her

Old Man Coyote was not at all eager for a fight, but he wanted that meat, and he meant to have it. He snarled in his ugliest way at Granny, hoping to frighten her so that she would drop the meat. But she didn't drop it. Instead she snarled back. Old Man Coyote circled around her, looking for a chance to jump in and catch her unprepared. But as he circled Granny turned so as to always face him. Finding that he couldn't get at her from behind, Old Man Coyote, with the hair on his neck standing on end so as to make him look very fierce, growled a deep, angry growl, and sprang straight at Granny.

Of course she had to drop the meat, for she couldn't hold on to the meat and fight, too. Just at that minute Reddy Fox came up and sprang on Old Man Coyote from behind. Then such a fight as the twinkling stars looked down upon! Over and over the three rolled like a grey and red ball, all the time snarling, snapping, and kicking. It was dreadful, but it was very exciting. The piece of meat lay where Granny had dropped it and as the three struggled and fought they rolled farther and farther away from it.

Dear, dear, such a fight as that was! It ended when Granny and Reddy were too tired to fight any longer, and Old Man Coyote shook himself loose. He sprang to one side and then turned toward the place where Granny had dropped the meat at the beginning of the fight. There was no meat there! It had disappeared!

Cranbrook Woman Severely Injured

CRANBROOK, July 16 (CP)—Mrs. Jimmie Neas, Indian, Columbia Reservation, sustained severe injuries when struck by an auto on the highway six miles east of Galloway.

She was crossing the road in front of her parked car, according to police reports, and failed to see an oncoming car, driven by Arthur Hill, Calgary.

She is in hospital here with a badly lacerated leg, two broken ribs and a possible fractured leg.

WOMEN'S WORK TO BE FEATURE

Many Prizes Are Offered for Home Handicraft Classes At Fall Fair

Providing an outlet for all those interested in domestic science and home handicraft, the British Columbia Agricultural Association is offering a total of 215 prizes, amounting to $294, for the women's department of the Fall Fair, to be held at the Willows from September 10 to 17, inclusive, it was announced yesterday by W. H. Mearns, secretary of the association.

Classes have been provided in household linen work, knitted suits, knitting and crochet in silk or cotton, knitting and crochet in wool, work done with British Columbia wool, weaving, basketry, arts and crafts as they apply to the home, plain needlework, thrift class, quilts and rugs, work for ladies over seventy years of age, and similar classes for girls' work.

In addition to the prizes offered by the British Columbia Agricultural Association, various firms in the city are offering special awards, particularly in the section devoted to cooking.

Mrs. J. G. Simpson has been appointed director of the women's department, and expects to have some special displays of a non-competitive character.

Cardigan Neck Two-Piece Dress

Also Shirt Collar Version Same Pattern!

AN easy to wear cardigan top, two-piece dress, ideal for town, spectator or sports wear. Made of white sharkskin this practical, smart, "two-piecer" is perfect for week-end or longer vacations. For week-ends, just tuck a pastel sweater in your bag and wear it with the skirt. Wear the blouse as a jacket over your sheer print dress. Note the flared skirt has a front and back action plait for sports freedom. How about making it in pastel flannel or cotton hopsacking and the blouse of cotton print in the shirt collared version as a smart topper? Washable silks and crush-resistant linen are other popular fabrics for this simple-to-sew dress.

Style No. 2612 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38-inches bust. Size 16 requires 3 1-4 yards of 39-inch material.

FAMILIAR STUFF

Said the American police sergeant: "Did you give the prisoner the third degree?"

"Yes," replied the constable. "We browbeat him, badgered him, and asked him every question we could think of."

"And what did he do?"

"He dozed off, and merely said 'Yes, dear, you are perfectly right.'"

—Photographs by Ros Weller.

Hughes to Make Good Will Tour

NEW YORK, July 17 (CP). — A World's Fair official tonight said Howard Hughes and his world-girdling crew will make a good will tour of all South and Latin American countries in two or three months.

The purpose of the flight will be to invite Government officials and flyers to the New York Fair in 1939. The official said Hughes' itinerary was not yet complete and it is still undetermined whether he will seek any flight records.

KING CONVALESCENT FROM HIS ILLNESS

WINDSOR, England, July 16 (CP). —The King was recovered sufficiently from his attack of influenza today to go for a walk in the grounds of the Royal Lodge, Windsor Great Park. The Government announced nine destroyers and eighteen planes will escort the King and Queen when they embark at Dover in the Admiralty yacht Enchantress for their State visit to France on Tuesday.

ARIZONA COWBOY WINS AT CALGARY

CALGARY, July 16 (CP). — Earl Thode, of Casa Grande, Arizona, won the North America bucking horse title in the Calgary Stampede today, but his ride sent him to hospital for treatment of a dislocated left elbow.

He suffered the injury two minutes after his final ride, when a twisting bronc crashed into a fence. After treatment the thirty-seven-year-old rider, three times world champion, returned to collect his trophies and a cheque for $368 before a crowd of 10,000.

Last year's champion, Johnny Jordan, the singing cowboy from Carlsbad, New Mexico, placed fourth. Second place went to Guy Cash, of White Bird, Idaho, while Sykes Robinson, of Cochrane, Alberta, was third.

BY-LAW AUTHORIZED

REVELSTOKE, B.C., July 16 (CP).—Revelstoke voters today authorized a by-law to raise $39,000 for the construction of a new combined city hall and fire hall. The vote was 233 to 64.

AT LAST . . .
An Oil Range That is Different--Ultra Smart--Modern to the Minute

THE NEW Diana OIL RANGE

and its operating cost is much less than other Ranges

Brings Comfort and Beauty to City and Rural Homes

Here is the newest development in Oil Ranges where beauty and real efficiency are desired. The new DIANA combines the beauty of gleaming porcelain and bakelite with the strength of reinforced steel. This is not an "adapted" range but a heavy-duty polished-cast-steel-top range designed primarily for range oil. Every feature has been planned to give you perfect performance in your kitchen.

The large oven is equipped with reliable thermometer. A handy utility drawer below keeps your utensils tidy and easily accessible. Simmer control enables you to dispense with excessive heat, leaving your kitchen cool and comfortable. In Winter when heat is desired simply touch the valve to warm the kitchen.

Costs Only $134.50
Installed in Your Home

COSTS LESS THAN 1c PER HOUR TO RUN

The DIANA is especially designed to burn range oil. It is easily lighted and controlled, burns less than one pint per hour.

No Soot — No Smoke — No Grease — No Odor — No Dangerous Gas

In the cut-away illustration note how the heat circulates from the burners. These A.B.C. Ring-Type Burners are giving complete satisfaction in thousands of homes, and were selected for the DIANA Range for their trouble free performance. The two 6¼-inch heavy-duty burners will give you the utmost in service.

Notice to Dealers: If you are not already selling DIANA Oil Ranges get in touch with Hall Fuel & Heating Co., 2203 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C.

Notice to Home Owners: If your dealer has no DIANA Range in stock write to Hall Fuel & Heating Co., 2203 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C., who will advise you of the name of your nearest dealer.

"You and Me" Story of Ex-Convicts on Parole

A dramatic story of ex-convicts, out on parole and forbidden to marry, is the powerful theme of the new Sylvia Sidney-George Raft film, "You and Me," which will end tomorrow at the Dominion Theatre. It is a romance of the city streets, with Miss Sidney as a department store girl who hungers for the right kind of love, and Raft as a casual drifter who awakens to his real self in the pleading arms of the girl who loves him.

As usual, Miss Sidney is at her best in a film of this type, as evidenced by her past successes, "An American Tragedy," "Street Scene," "You Only Live Once" and "Fury." Incidentally, the last two films were directed by the same man who both produced and directed "You and Me," Fritz Lang.

FREDRIC MARCH TO PLAY PIRATE

Takes Lead in "The Buccaneer," Historical Story Opening at Columbia Tomorrow

Character roles are second nature to Fredric March who plays the part of Jean Lafitte, the notorious pirate of the early nineteenth, in "The Buccaneer," which will open tomorrow at the Columbia Theatre.

In the Cecil B. DeMille epic of the War of 1812 he is seen as the swashbuckling king of the pirates whose loyalty to the United States helps win the Battle of New Orleans. He is assisted by the exotic Hungarian star, Franciska Gaal, Akim Tamiroff, Margot Grahame, Walter Brennan and Ian Keith.

ARTFUL

About 2 a.m. a man called a doctor up in a small village and asked him to come immediately to a place about ten miles away.

The doctor dressed, got out his car, and drove with the caller to the destination mentioned.

"What is your fee?" asked the stranger when they arrived.

"Five dollars," replied the doctor.

"Here it is then," said the man, handing the money ove. "cheap, too. The garage man wanted to charge me $7.50. You see, I missed my last train."

BIG MOVIE DEAL MADE BY PLAZA

Entire Output of United Artists Corporation Secured for Victoria By Ralph Calladine

Ralph Calladine, owner of the Plaza Theatre, has just closed a deal with the United Artists Corporation, Ltd., for their entire output of pictures, and Victoria motion picture patrons can again be sure of seeing the greatest line-up of motion pictures ever presented to the public.

This deal covers all the product from the following producers: Samuel Goldwyn, who last year presented "Hurricane," "Stella Dallas," "Dead End," "Goldwyn Follies," and "Marco Polo"; Selznick International, who last year gave "Prisoner of Zenda," "Tom Sawyer," "Nothing Sacred"; Walter Wanger, who produced such great pictures as "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Vogues of 1938," "Fifty-Second Street," "Stand In"; Alexander Korda, who produced "King Henry the Eighth," "Ghost Goes West," "Elephant Boy"; Edwin Small, who produced "Count of Monte Cristo," "Last of the Mohicans"; Hal Roach, who produced "Topper," "Merrily We Live," and the Laurel and Hardy comedies.

Mr. Calladine is being congratulated on being able to make this deal with the United Artists Corporation, which has always endeavored to make only such pictures as will meet with the wholehearted approval of the theatre-going public.

CITY COUNCIL TO MEET ON MONDAY

Regular Session to Be Held at 4 O'Clock in Afternoon — To Name Delegate

Delegates to the Union of British Columbia Municipalities convention, to be held at Nelson on September 14 and 15, will be named at a meeting of the City Council set for 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

An application from the 16th Canadian Scottish Association to erect a memorial cross at Pioneer Square, and to hold an annual service there, will be dealt with.

Offers of J. G. Hay to provide part of the northwest corner Fort Street and Belmont Avenue for street widening purposes, and H. G. Dalby to deed part of the southeast corner of Fort and St. Charles Streets for improvement of the intersection will be discussed.

A relief committee report will inform the council that all cases marked unemployable prior to March 1 are 100 per cent charges upon the city, but cases marked unemployable after March will be a 40 per cent charge upon the Provincial Government.

LAWLESS MEN IN THRILLING DRAMA

"Alcatraz Island," Coming to Oak Bay, Has Unexpected and Exciting Climax

America's most widely publicized penitentiary, that "Big Rock" situated in the chill waters of San Francisco Bay, is brought to the motion picture screen for the first time in "Alcatraz Island," a thrilling Cosmopolitan melodrama which will open tomorrow at the Oak Bay Theatre.

Grim but fascinating is this story of men who live outside the law, and of the men whose duty it is to apprehend and convict them. Every moment is loaded with thrills as this drama moves swiftly to an unexpected and more exciting climax.

Leading players are: John Litel, Dick Purcell, Gordon Oliver, Mary Maguire and Ann Sheridan.

ATLAS TO SHOW SCOTTISH SATIRE

"Storm in a Teacup," to Open Tomorrow, Is Bright Comedy by Victor Saville

One of the brightest comedies ever made will open tomorrow and show for two days only at the Atlas Theatre. This is Victor Saville's delightful Scottish satire, "Storm in a Teacup," which introduces a charming new romantic pair, Vivien Leigh and Rex Harrison, in the leading roles.

The fun is fast and furious throughout, culminating in a hilarious climax in which the fun is provided by the most mischievous crowd of dogs one ever saw. Dogs of all shapes, sizes and breeds led by the famous mongrel dog star, Scruffy, takes part in this superb sequence.

Starred in Drama at Dominion Theatre

GEORGE Raft, co-starred with Sylvia Sidney, in the gripping Paramount film "You and Me," which will show for the last times tomorrow at the Dominion Theatre.

Alfalfa Proving A Valuable Crop

E. J. Stephens, of 2848 Dufferin Avenue, has returned from a short visit to the Okanagan and surrounding districts. He expressed the opinion that the introduction of alfalfa growing in the stock sections of the country had been the salvation of farming in these areas. The farmers were able to take off three cuttings in the season and excellent crops were characteristic of the operations.

At Enderby, which was one of the districts visited by Mr. Stephens, the results of the alfalfa cropping was much in evidence and farmers realize what a boon the growing of this product had been to the farming community.

TRULY GALLANT

Mr. Caboodle was always very courteous to women. One day, when he was airing his views on politeness, he remarked that he had never seen an ugly woman.

A woman standing near, who happened to have a flat nose, overheard him, and said "Sir, look at me, and confess that I am ugly!"

"Madam," replied Mr. Caboodle, "like the rest of your sex you are an angel fallen from the skies, but it was not your fault that you happened to land on your nose."

"Lord Jeff," Gripping Drama, Is at Capitol

The drama of the British Merchant Marine serves to team Freddie Bartholomew and Mickey Rooney in a gripping story in "Lord Jeff," story of England's future sailors, now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Its locale, the Russell-Cotes Nautical School, one of the famous English institutions grouped in the Barnardo Homes where orphans are trained for the future, the new picture depicts Freddie as a youngster, the tool of crooks, represented as a scion of nobility, who is taken from his dishonest guardians and trained at the school.

Mickey Rooney plays the student petty officer who is first Freddie's Nemesis, later his friend, as the spoiled boy finds loyalty and regeneration. Intimate details of the training of the boys, their athletic meets, mast-climbing contests, annual boat race, and their final graduation to places aboard the Queen Mary, form a background against which a story of sacrifice and hate, loyalty and regeneration is played.

Soviet Stars at the Plaza

Above Is a Scene From the Dramatic Soviet Film, "Peter the First," Which Will Open Tomorrow and Play for Three Days Only at the Plaza Theatre.

Big Soviet Film Winner Of Highest Paris Award

By far the most stupendous production ever produced at the Soviet film studios, "Peter the First," will open tomorrow at the Plaza Theatre, bearing the highest award of the Paris Exposition.

The lavish resources of the largest motion picture studios in the world were all tapped for this film, Taken from the famous book by Alexei Tolstoy—who also collaborated on the script—"Peter the First," was three years in production.

Whole cities and fortresses were built, only to be blown to bits in sweeping battle scenes or burned and inundated in the sequence on the great St. Petersburg flood of 1704.

Easily the most popular film in Soviet movie history, "Peter the First" breaks with the stock portrayals of the famous Czar. The portrait of Peter the Great is entirely in his favor, although by no means an endorsement of Czarism itself.

PREVENTING SYMPTOMS DUE TO THE ITCH BUG AND OTHER INSECTS

Like all boys I wanted to travel all over the world, particularly throught the tropical jungles. However, in the back of my mind always was, not the fear of snakes, lions, or tigers, but of annoying bugs and insects that would be crawling about my body day and night. Particularly was I afraid, even as a boy, of the bugs that would cause such intense itching that I would be continuously scratching and tearing my skin to obtain relief.

Later, as a physician, I met hundreds of cases of scabies in hospital. Scabies, the medical name for the itch, is due to the presence of a little bug or insect which gets under the skin and causes the most intense itching. This insect, which resembles a tiny turtle, can scarcely be seen by the naked eye, gets into the middle layer of the skin and because of its bristling hair cannot get out again and remains there until it dies. However it leaves its eggs which develop into insects and these insects in turn burrow into the skin. The cure then is to smother the little insects and destroy the eggs.

The treatment has usually been the application of ointments containing sulphur, tar, carbolic, zink, or mercury. Sulphur has been used more than any of the others both in the form of baths and ointments. The process of killing off insects and eggs is sometimes slow and prolonged.

What appears to be a boon to those afflicted with scabies and a preventive for those who must or wish to travel or be where the insects are prevalent, is announced by Dr. R. A. Nolan in Military Surgeon. Dr. Nolan uses sublimed sulphur in a bland paste soap which combined well, is applied as a copious lather and allowed to dry leaving a sulphurated film on the body. For treatment, the application of the soap is repeated for three days with daily changes of underwear. The sulphur paste soap contains 18 per cent of sulphur and requires only about half an ounce for one satisfactory application. This thin film of soap will produce enough hydrogen sulphide (gas with the rotten egg odor) to discourage the itch mite from lodging in seams and underclothing.

Just one application of this soap would thus permit one to be amid the itch mite and other insects which cause definite symptoms and even definite diseases in the body.

PRAYED OUTSIDE CHURCH

QUEBEC, July 16 (C.P.)—A laborer was stranded seventy-five feet above ground for several hours yesterday. He crawled out on a narrow sill to replace a church window pane and forgot to figure how he would get back in. He said he did some "tall praying" until firemen with a 100-foot ladder came to his rescue.

NEXT SEASON'S ARTISTS NAMED

Community Concert Association Reports Membership Increase

Dorothy Crawford, character sketch artist, Dallef Frantz, pianist, and Kathryn Meisle, contralto, are the three artists who will be presented by the Victoria Community Concert Association here during the 1938-1939 season.

The selection was determined at the meeting of the committee held at the Y.W.C.A. Discussion of organization resulted in the decision to make distinct entities of the Victoria Musical Arts Society and the Community Concert Association, which have previously operated as one. Mrs. Allon Peebles, who presided at the meeting, will continue as president of the Community Concert Association; Mrs. Duncan MacBride was named secretary; and Mrs. Arthur Walsh will fill the office of treasurer.

Great satisfaction with the results of the initial year's experiment was expressed by Mrs. Peebles in her report. The committee had been greatly encouraged by the public response. Thanks were expressed to the workers who had given such splendid support.

Reporting on the results of the last campaign, which closed on May 14, Mrs. Duncan MacBride, headquarters secretary, stated that the association membership for 1938-1939 was 468 as compared with 374 last season, an increase of ninety-four members. The report of the treasurer, Mrs. Arthur Walsh, showed the monetary result of the canvass to be $2,089.42. Mrs. C. W. Bradshaw gave a report of the campaign dinner; Brian Burdon-Murphy's report on the advertising campaign was read, and also that of the retiring secretary, Miss Lora Blake, covering the association's concerts for the past season.

Doing Post-Graduate Work

DR. ANDREW NICHOLSON REID

Of this city, was among those who passed the examination recently held in Montreal by the Medical Council of Canada, enabling him to practice medicine in Canada. Son of Mr. and Mrs. David Reid, St. David Street, Dr. Reid attended St. Michael's School here for eight years, then Oak Bay High School. From there he went in 1929 to Edinburgh University, and after graduating from there in Medicine and Surgery in 1935, spent two years doing hospital work in London. He is at present doing post-graduate work at McGill University, Montreal, but expects to return home in October, his first visit since 1932.

EAGLES TO HOLD PICNIC AUGUST 7

The regular meeting of Victoria Aerie No. 12, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was held in the Eagles Hall, 1319 Government Street. One candidate was initiated into the order and another application for membership was accepted.

Worthy President A. B. Graham announced, on behalf of the picnic committee, that the annual, old-fashioned basket picnic would be held on August 7 at Island View beach. Buses with Eagles, their families and friends would leave the Eagles' Hall on that date at the customary hours.

A communication from the Junior Chamber of Commerce, regarding co-operation in the parades next month, was referred to a committee consisting of C. H. Leater, J. Barker, George Ree, J. W. Bridgewood and C. L. Andrews.

Visiting brothers from the Nanaimo Aerie and Swift Current Aerie were welcomed and gave short talks.

The surprise of the evening came when A. J. Buller, who had just been initiated into the aerie at 9 o'clock, was approached by the committee at 10 p.m. and informed that the cumulative attendance prize of $25 had been awarded to him.

It was suggested that an "On To San Francisco Club" be formed to facilitate the visit of quite a number of Eagles to the exposition and the Grand Aerie session, which is expected to be held in San Francisco next year.

French Seaplane Crashes on Rocks

CHERBOURG, France, July 16 (AP)—Twelve persons were injured tonight when a giant transport seaplane smashed on rocks shortly after settling on the sea near here. The plane was being tested for the French navy.

Two naval officers and twelve civilian engineers aboard were rescued by cutters from warships off the coast.

NORTH SHORE TRIMS CALGARY IN CUP-TIE MATCH

$50,000 Gold Cup Handicap Race Is Won by Seabiscuit

Sensational Stretch Drive and Smart Riding by Jockey George Woolf Brings Charley Howard's Horse Through to Spectacular Victory—Specify Takes Second Place

INGLEWOOD, Cal., July 16 (AP).—In a great driving finish after trailing the field off to start, Seabiscuit returned to his winning ways today, taking the Hollywood $50,000 Gold Cup Handicap by a length in new track record time of 2:03 4-5 for the mile and a quarter. It was a photo finish for second as the crowd of 55,000 cheered wildly.

Charley Howard's great five-year-old, fifth at the halfway post, was given a great ride by Jockey George Woolf. Specify was second, the photograph showed later, with Whichcee third, a whisker back. Specify had set the pace from the start, leading by ten lengths at one stage.

The winner paid $3.40, $2.40 and $2.20 on $2 pari-mutuel tickets, with Specify paying $2.60 and $2.20. Whichcee, owned by Major Austin C. Taylor, of Vancouver, paid $2.40.

Victory was worth $37,150 to owner Howard, raising Seabiscuit's earnings to $290,215 and placing him sixth in the all-time list of American money winners. Second place was worth $5,000; third place $2,500, and fourth which went to Ligaroti, was worth $1,000.

ESPOSA TOPS $20,000 RACE IN NEW YORK

Breaks Track Record in Winning Butler Handicap—Rex Flag Is Second

NEW YORK, July 16 (AP).—Esposa, six-year-old mare owned by William Ziegler, Jr., broke the track record for a mile and three sixteenths today in winning the $20,000 Butler Handicap from twelve worthy rivals at Empire City.

Nick Wall drove Esposa over the distance in 1:37 3-5 to clip three-fifths of a second off the old mark of 1:58 1-5 established by Good Gamble two years ago.

Paying 8 to 1, the daughter of Espino came from off the pace to finish a half-length in front of Mrs. Louis Viau's Rex Flag, an outsider which returned 8 to 1 place. Mrs. Parker Corning's Thanksgiving trailed by another half-length for third place and held a like margin on the fast-closing Teufel from Ogden Phipps' stable.

William Woodward's Fighting Fox, coupled with Teufel and Isolater and the public's choice, finished tenth after racing with the leaders for three-quarters of a mile.

WINS LASSIE STAKES

CHICAGO, July 16 (AP).—Herbert M. Woolf's Inscoelda won the $28,000 Lassie Stakes over six furlongs at Arlington Park today, with the Milky Way Farm's Dinner Date second.

Unerring, which ran as an entry with Inscoelda, took third money in the rich feature for two-year-old fillies.

Inscoelda ran the six furlongs in 1.11 3-5 and paid $3.80, $2.60 and $2.80. Dinner Date paid $12 and $7.40.

Inscoelda earned owner Woolf $17,540, with Unerring earning an additional $2,500 for third money. The place purse amounted to $5,000 in the race, in which nine started and the gross purse distribution totaled $28,620.

HANDICAP WINNER

SALEM, N.H., July 16 (AP). — Responding with a thrilling stretch drive when called up by Jockey Leonard Turner, Hal Price Headley's Preeminent captured the $4,000 added Tomlin Handicap at Rockingham Park by a neck today over the Wheatley Stable's Merry Lassie to pay the good price of $9.14. A crowd of 20,000 saw the feature race.

McMANUS NETS FOUR GOALS AS MAINLAND SQUAD TRIUMPHS, 9-2

Clever Centre Forward Leading Scorer in One-Sided Victory Over Alberta Champions in First Of Dominion Challenge Cup Play-Downs—Second Match Carded Tomorrow Night

VANCOUVER, July 16 (CP).—North Shore United, British Columbia representatives in the Dominion Soccer Cup playdowns, scored a smashing 9-2 victory here today over Calgary Callies, Alberta champions, in the first game of a best-of-three series.

By their convincing win, United were installed as overwhelming favorites to cop the next game, to be played here Monday night. A third game, if necessary, will be played the following evening.

Individual scoring honors went to Mike McManus, energetic centre forward for North Shore, who registered four tallies. He scored a hat-trick in the first half and bulged the hemp once after the breather. Alec Christie, speedy left-winger, scored a hat-trick, while Jimmy Spencer, playing inside left, and Swede Larson, inside right, completed the scoring for North Shore. Ern Moorehouse and Andy Law, inside forwards, scored both goals for Callies. Moorehouse netting in the first half and Law shortly after the start of the second.

CHRISTIE SCORES

North Shore opened the scoring after ten minutes of play when Christie drove past Adam from a scramble, giving the goalie no chance to save. A minutes after the face-off, United increased their margin when Jimmy Spencer, at inside left, netted with a terrific left-foot drive from outside the penalty area.

North Shore swarmed all over the Callies in this stage of the game. Mike McManus scored when he bustled his way through the backs to flip the ball over the goalie's head. He scored his second goal on a neat cross from Christie, heading past young Jack Adams outstretched arms.

Te Callies attacked strongly, and as a result of a clever passing play started by Pete Wilson, veteran right-half, Andy Law scored with a terrific drive that completely beat the North Shore custodian.

DOMINATES PLAY

North Shore came right back, and Harvey, play-making centre-half, put Reg Liptrott away on the right wing and the winger centred perfectly for Christie to head into the corner of the net. Still on the attack, and completely dominating play, McManus registered his fourth goal when he weaved his way through the defence. A moment later Christie completed his hat-trick with a header on Findler's pass through Callies' defence.

With ten minutes remaining, Callies rearranged their line-up and brought Brown on at inside right, with Bill Stuppard going off. The change brought no results and the game ended with Uniteds still attacking.

Line-ups:

Calgary Callies—Adam; McKay and Stuppard; Wilson, Smith and Coupland; Steedman, Moorehouse, Matthews, Law and West. Subs: Brown and Ogilvie.

North Shore United — Rabbitt; Cummings and Harrison; Hewitt, Harvey and Goodheart; Liptrott, Larson, McManus, Spencer and Christie. Sub—Findler.

Referee—Alex Murray.

WESTONS ADVANCE

WINNIPEG, July 16 (CP).—United Weston, Manitoba's perennial representatives for the Dominion soccer championship, snowed Port William Westfort Wanderers, new Ontario color-bearers, under here tonight with an avalanche of goals to capture the inter-provincial series for the Canadian football crown.

The Manitobans won 7-0. They defeated the boys from the head of the Great Lakes by the same score here Friday night.

Ramming the ball into the net as they pleased, the Weston boys scored two goals in the first half and blasted home five more counters after resuming.

Shooting with deadly accuracy, young Doug McMahon scored four of the Manitobans' goals, while he accounted for three markers Friday night.

While Secretary Sam Davidson, of the Dominion Football Association here, was non-committal, the Weston aggregation will likely play the winners of the Toronto Ulster-Montreal Carsteel or Dome Mines here in the semi-final, with the finals between the East and West almost sure to take place in Winnipeg's soccer sector.

ULSTER TRIUMPHS

TORONTO, July 16 (CP).—Toronto Ulster United defeated Montreal Carsteel here, 4-0, today in the first contest of their best-of-three Eastern semi-final Dominion Cup soccer series. Second game to determine a winner to meet Dome Mine eleven in the Eastern final will be played here Monday night.

PASCH HEADS RACING FIELD

H. E. Morris' Horse Winner Of Eclipse Stakes at Newmarket

NEWMARKET, England, July 16 (CP).—H. E. Morris' Pasch, the Derby favorite who disappointed his backers at Epsom, won the Eclipse Stakes, important event for three and four-year-olds run over one and one-quarter miles.

The son of Blandford-Paxca defeated the Earl of Derby's Fair Copy by three lengths, with Viscount Astor's Cave Man another two lengths away, third in the field of six.

Pasch started at 13 to 8, Fair Copy at 7 to 2, and Cave Man at 7 to 1. Pasch covered the distance in 2.12.

Cave Man and Blandstar, close together, made the early running, Perifox bringing up the rear. Cave Man led by a slight margin at the halfway mark, followed by Blandstar, Scottish Union and Fair Copy, with Pasch and Perifox still in the rear.

Scottish Union weakened a quarter-mile from home. From then on Pasch was irresistable, passing the leaders with a strong run down the stretch. Scottish Union was fourth, a neck behind Cave Man.

PIRATES TAKE FIRST OF SERIES FROM THE GIANTS

Klinger Pitches Pittsburgh Nine To Fine Victory

Sacramento Rookie Continues Brilliant Mound Work in Scoring Eighth Win of Season—Dodgers Trim Cincy Reds, 12-5—Joe Gordon Paces Yanks—Cleveland Triumphs

(By the Associated Press)

The Pirates drew first blood yesterday in their important series with the Giants for first place in the National League.

Rookie Bob Klinger set the New Yorkers down at Pittsburgh with eight hits, and the Bucs won out 7-3 to go out in front in the pennant chase by half a game.

A crowd of 15,197 turned out to watch the rookie from Sacramento, who specializes in whipping the Giants and St. Louis Cardinals, trounce the New Yorkers for the third time this year. It was the eighth win of the season against one setback for the league's leading elbower.

Chicago Cubs came from behind twice, then swung into a tenth-inning attack that defeated Boston Bees, 8-7, and enabled Bruins to run their winning streak to four in a row at Chicago.

Rookie Rosy Rosen and Tuck Stainback, with four hits apiece, and Fred Frankhouse, with as neat a relief pitching trick as has been seen this season, paced the Brooklyn Dodgers to a lopsided 12-5 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

CARDS GO UNDER

In St. Louis, Phil Weintraub's seventh-inning home run gave Philadelphia a 2-1 victory over St. Louis Cardinals in the opening of a four-game series. Al Hollingsworth held the Cards to five hits.

In the other major league Rookie Joe Gordon's big bat backed up Red Ruffing, and the Yankees walloped the Detroit Tigers, 7-5, to stretch their winning streak to six straight and maintain their game and a half margin.

Gordon, a former Oregon boy, clouted his eleventh homer of the year with a mate aboard in the second inning, added a triple and single before the day was over, and drove in a total of three runs. Ruffing, chalking up his thirteenth victory of the season against three setbacks, was tagged for a dozen hits by the Tigers, but was tight in the pinches.

Gordon's three-bagger just missed being a homer, hitting the upright marking of the left field foul line.

At Boston the St. Louis Browns paced by Harland Clift's eleventh and twelfth homers of the year, ended a ten-game losing streak by whipping Boston's Red Sox, 8-3. It was the first time this season Browns have won a game in Boston.

Washington defeated the Chicago White Sox, 3-2, after tying the score in the sixth inning and capitalizing on an outfield error in the seventh at Washington.

Meantime, shoving over two runs without making a hit in the seventh inning, the Cleveland Indians came from behind to win a seesaw struggle from the Philadelphia Athletics, 9-8.

COAST LEAGUE

(By the Associated Press)

Los Angeles defeated Sacramento, 7-3, last night for the second straight time to gain a full two-game lead in the Pacific Coast Baseball League.

At Oakland, Bob Joyce pitched his seventh shutout and twelfth victory of the season to give Oakland Oaks a 4-0 win over Portland. The Oaks scored in the first inning when Jesse Hill singled and scored on singles by Luby and Holley. The Oaks bagged two more runs in the second and another in the seventh off Southpaw George Darrow. Darrow hurled the whole game for the Oregonians.

Bolstered by the return to action of Shortstop Tommy Carney, who started double plays that put down Seattle uprisings in the eighth and ninth innings, Hollywood braced themselves and ended their skill by winning from Rainiers, 5-3.

HALTS RAINIERS

Jim Prendergast, husky left-hander whom Seattle turned loose earlier in the year, came to Johnny Babich's rescue with two on and none out in the ninth and quickly squelched a Seattle rally that threatened to tie the score.

Red Killefer's stars scored all five of their runs off Pete Jonas, sawed-off Seattle righthander from Whitman College, at Walla Walla, in the first five innings. Jonas got off to a bad start, giving up three runs in the first inning, and the Suds never were able to catch up.

Tennis Coaching Class at Victoria

Inaugurated in 1937 by the Vancouver Island Tennis League and with the co-operation of the Provincial Department of Recreational and Physical Training, professional coaching of aspiring young netters has made great progress, and today it is estimated that approximately 300 boys and girls are taking advantage of the teaching. In addition to Victoria, classes have been organized at Langford and Duncan, and are under consideration for Lake Cowichan and Chemainus. Interest in the scheme started here has been evidenced by the Canadian Lawn Tennis Association and the United States Lawn Tennis Association, and it has been acknowledged that Victoria leads the Dominion in the organization of junior tennis. Considerable credit for the excellent work now being carried on must go to W. E. "Reg" Corfield, energetic president of the Vancouver Island Tennis League, and his colleagues, who have been untiring in their efforts to encourage the younger players. In the top picture, one of the classes poses for The Colonist cameraman, while in the lower picture, Coach Terry Peers is seen instructing his pupils.

ESQUIMALT NET TOURNEY OPENS

Eighteen Matches Run Off in Annual Tourney—Ralph Butler Eliminated

Eighteen matches, all singles, were played yesterday on the Hillcrest Tennis Club courts as netters opened their bids for the Esquimalt championships. In the men's play straight-set wins were the order of the day, but in the women's events two of the five matches went to three sets.

Ralph Butler, home club member, who usually escapes first-round elimination, went to the sidelines when he was unable to match the stroking of Bob Tuthill, of the Civil Service Club. The scores were 6-2, 6-2. In the best match of the day, Cam Brown, C.P.R. netter, defeated Curly Harbinson, Hillcrest Club, 8-6, 6-4.

Hitting her real form after dropping the initial set, 1-6, Miss N. Rice-Jones, C.P.R. Club, came from behind to defeat Miss D. Lockley, home club player, in a three-set match, 1-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Dempsey Accepts Referee's Terms

SEATTLE, July 16 (CP).—Promoter Nate Druxman said tonight Jack Dempsey had accepted terms to referee the Freddie Steele-Al Hostak middleweight championship fight here July 26.

Druxman said whether the former heavyweight champion would actually referee depended finally on a decision by the State Boxing Commission, but approval of Dempsey was considered mere formality.

BOBBY ALSTON RETAINS TITLE

Finishes Ahead of Field in Ontario Open Golf Championship

TORONTO, July 16 (CP).—Slender Bobby Alston, of Ottawa's Chaidicre Club, retained his Ontario open golf championship by scoring a sub-par 70 again at Summit Club for a thirty-six-hole score of 140.

Slim Bobby Reith, former Winnipegger, now pro at the Windsor, Ont., Essex course, toured the course in 73—six strokes better than his total in the first round yesterday. Reith, making his professional tournament debut, came in for $5 prize money with his thirty-six-hole total of 152.

Robert T. Gray, Jr., professional at Toronto Scarboro, found trouble after tying Alston on the first round and finished in a three-way tie for second place with Gordon Brydson, of Missisauqua, and Sam Kerr, of Toronto Lake Shore, at 142.

Gordon Taylor, Jr., of Summit, and Ray Getliffe, of London Highland, professional hockey star with Boston Bruins, gained places with Sandy Somerville, of London Hunt, and Jim Boeckh, of York Downs, on the Ontario Willingdon Cup team for the amateur inter-provincial matches at London this month. Somerville and Boeckh had already been conceded berths.

HIGHLAND GAMES

A special meeting of the Highland Games Association will be held in the Liberal Headquarters tomorrow evening at 7:30 to complete arrangements for the big meet at Macdonald Park next Saturday morning and afternoon. The complete programme of events will be released some time this week.

Betty Jamieson And Westland to Play Here Today

A GOLF match, which should attract a great deal of interest, and at the same time be productive of some brilliant shotmaking, will be staged at the Colwood course this morning, commencing at 9:30. Jack Westland, of Everett, recent winner of the Pacific Northwest amateur crown at Portland, and Miss Betty Jamieson, runner-up to Marian McDougall in the women's Northwest tournament, and holder of the Texas State title, will be the principals. Miss Jamieson, who fired a 74 over the Oak Bay course two weeks ago, will team up with Joe Pryke, Colwood pro, against Westland and Bill Roberts, of Seattle, in an eighteen-hole exhibition contest. Westland is well known in Victoria, having played in several big meets here several years ago. He is a former Walker Cup star, once winner of the Western amateur honors, and also an ex-French titleholder. Miss Jamieson is rapidly becoming one of the leading young women golfers in the United States.

GASMEN WILL MEET EAGLES IN CUP GAME

Ball Clubs Clash Tomorrow Evening — Zulu Giants Coming This Month

MANAGER Bill Bridgewood's Eagles, second-berth occupants in the Rithet Cup race, will be gunning for revenge when they stack up against the hustling Pitzer & Nex aggregation tomorrow evening at the Caledonia Avenue ball lot, in a city championship fixture. The game will get under way at 6:15 o'clock.

Gas men turned back the feathered tribe, 7-3, Wednesday, after being spotted five big runs in the opening game, and followed this success with a 14-4 triumph over the Navy, Friday. Tomorrow, however, Bridgewood will trot out a new hurler, Gordon Donaldson, from Nelson, and feels confident his proteges can turn the tables on Pitzer & Nex.

Roy Barnes, boss of the gasmen, and former receiving ace, will be expected to send Lonnie Murray, his first-string hurler, against the Eagles in this important encounter. Murray hurled good ball in the Bellingham series and should be able to stop the birdmen.

CANNIBALS COMING

The Cannibals are coming! There's no reason for alarm, however, or no need to lock up the children, as the Cannibals are a touring baseball club and rated as one of the greatest diamond attractions now touring Canada. Victoria Baseball Association officials have completed arrangements for their visit here on Wednesday and Thursday, July 27 and 28.

Smart ball players with a comedy show that is novel and certainly entertaining, the African Zulu Giants, just another name for the tourists, play in grass skirts and provide enough laughs for the entire family. "Chief Bolo," the big medicine man who stands over six feet, and the little jungle prince, "Rosto Hobo," are the leading showmen with the touring nine.

CLUBMEN BEAT NAVY

Hammering out nineteen safeties and running wild on the fashions, Manager Tommy Restell's Victoria Club ball nine, yesterday trounced a weak Navy squad, 27-7, in a Rithet Cup baseball fixture at the Royal Athletic Park.

Weakened by the absence of a number of their better players from the Esquimalt Naval Base, the bluejackets offered little opposition for the clubbers, in a game that was nothing short of a comedy of errors.

League officials announced yesterday that they have granted the request of Manager Charlie McDonald, of the Navy club, to postpone their remaining cup games until after the ships return to the base.

TRAVEL TODAY

Victoria All-Stars will journey to Port Angeles today to oppose Port Angeles in the first of the three-game series for the Hon. John Hart International Baseball Trophy. The second and third game will be played at the Royal Athletic Park on Saturday, July 23, at 2:30 and 6 o'clock.

All players making the trip today are asked to meet at the C.P.R. ticket office, Belleville Street, at 9 o'clock.

BEING PREPARED

Five C's Chalk Up Fifth Straight Triumph at Expense of Victoria Club—Incogs Defeat Albions—Wenman in Form—Peden High Scorer

Yesterday's Scores

Incogs, 150 for eight wickets; Albions, 29.

Registering impressive victories in yesterday's matches, Five C's and the University School Incogs, leading elevens, strengthened their positions in the race for the Victoria and District Cricket Association championship. Playing at Beacon Hill Park, Churchmen defeated Victoria, while the Incogs won from the Albions at the University School pitch.

Winning the toss and batting first the Five C's got away to a shaky start, losing two wickets for three runs, before the Payne brothers, Jack and George, joined partnership and batted confidently, putting on fifty runs before the former was run out. Eric Quainton and George Payne added seventy-six runs for the fourth wicket, the latter hitting well all around the wicket. Quainton also reached the sixties, being sixty-five not out when the innings was declared closed with the Five C's total at 198 for six wickets.

With just under two hours left to bat, Victoria lost their first four wickets before they had fifty runs on the board, and although they were playing carefully, Jack Payne and Hepworth, star Five C's trundlers, were getting wickets with monotonous regularity. The loser's total finally reached 108, leaving the Churchmen easy winners by ninety runs.

Jack Payne had the fine analysis of five wickets for thirty-three runs and Hepworth four for forty-nine.

INCOGS TRIUMPH

Finding it almost impossible to get runs from the brilliant bowling of Reg Wenman, Western Canada's ace cricketer, and Tisdall, Albions failed miserably at the University School grounds and were all out for the small total of twenty-nine runs. Wenman and Tisdall bowled unchanged, taking five wickets for six runs, and four for twenty runs, respectively.

Brilliant batting by Doug Peden, who scored sixty-seven runs before being bowled by Stenton, highlighted the Incogs innings. Peden hit hard, his score including three sixes and ten fours, and he put on twenty-nine runs in one over.

Tisdall, who shared the bowling honors with Reg Wenman, added a well-played twenty-two, and Bryden, hitting freely, contributed thirty-four runs. The Incogs called it a day with their total at 150 for eight wickets.

Splendid catches were made by Poyntz and Oakman.

UNNAMED COLT IS STAKES' WINNER

SANDOWN PARK, England, July 16 (CP).—A two-year-old colt by Mr. Jinks out of Apple Ring, as yet unnamed, today won the National Breeders' Produce Stakes for his owner, Capt. J. B. Fitzgerald.

He defeated by a neck another nameless entry, F. J. Barlow's filly by Sir Cosmo from Inchmahone, with Sir Abe Bailey's Meadow two lengths away, third in the field of fourteen.

The race, one of the richest of the turf's juvenile events, was worth £6,250 ($31,250). The distance was five furlongs. The Apple Ring colt started at 100 to 6, the Inchmahone filly at 11 to 4, and Meadow at 5 to 4.

LEADING FIELD IN JUNIOR GOLF MEET

Posting a card of 81, T. G. Gillespie is leading the small field at the end of the first eighteen holes in the junior championship of the Victoria Golf Club as a result of yesterday's play at the Oak Bay links. In second position is J. A. Squire with an 82 and then A. W. Gillespie is next with an 86. C. P. Rutherford had an 89 and A. E. Gillespie turned in a 96. The second round will be run off next Saturday morning.

RUNYAN SCORES EASY WIN OVER SNEAD IN FINAL

Comes Through With 8 and 7 Triumph in Final Of Annual Tournament Over Long-Hitting Virginia Shotmaker—Shoots a Great 67 to Be Five Up at Half-Way Distance

SHAWNEE-ON-DELAWARE, Pa., July 16 (AP).—Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N.Y., today finished off the finest streak of golf he's had in four years by defeating Sam Snead, the Virginia walloper, 8 and 7, in the final round of the National P.G.A. championship.

It was a hollow victory for Runyan, who had to go thirty-eight holes to beat Craig Wood for his first title at Buffalo, N.Y., in 1934. But it was hollow only because Snead, biggest disappointment in the national open at Denver last month, folded up completely in the face of a game that, with rare exceptions, was as straight and true as a plumb-line.

Runyan broke the record for the most decisive margin in a P.G.A. final, supplanting the 6 and 5 score which Jim Barnes beat Fred McLeod in 1919, and which Walter Hagen and Leo Diegel tied in beating "Wild Bill" Mehlhorn and Al Espinosa in 1925 and 1928, respectively.

He was twenty-four under par for the 196 holes he played since the first qualifying round last Sunday; he had only one bogey hole in his last seventy and that the single hole Snead won from him today; eleven one-putt greens out of the twenty-nine he played today, and he was two up at the end of the first nine holes and confident that he had Samuel Jackson Snead's scalp safely in the bag.

SMALL GALLERY

Runyan, scoring his victory before a disappointing gallery of 2,500, joined a group of golf's greatest notables by becoming a two-time winner. Others who have won twice are Barnes, 1916 and 1919; Hagen, 1921 and from 1924 to 1927; Diegel, 1928 and 1929; Shute, who scored the last two years, and Gene Sarazen, titleholder in 1922, 1923 and 1933.

Shooting a five-under-par 67 to Snead's 72, Runyan went two up in the first nine holes, won three more coming back and didn't let Slugging Sam, who had most of his trouble on the greens and in trying to match Runyan's approaches, win a single hole.

The former titleholder was so steady that he toured the flat Shawnee Country Club course in thirteen pars and five birdies.

Snead, who was away on almost every green because Runyan consistently stuck his approaches inside, also had trouble on his short putts. The West Virginian missed an eight-footer to lose the third; missed a four-footer that would have given him the fifth; was a foot short from ten feet on the sixth, which they halved; missed from seven feet to drop the ninth after overshooting the green, and three-putted the tenth from twenty-five feet. At that hole Sam was so disgusted after he flubbed a two-footer that he knocked his ball into a trap.

FINE APPROACHING

On the other two holes which Runyan won, the eleventh and twelfth, two beautiful No. 4 iron shots told the story. No. 11 "Little Poison" stuck his second two and a half feet away from the pin and canned the putt, and was only seven feet away with his approach at the twelfth.

Though outdriven as much as sixty-five yards by Slugging Sam, Runyan made up for that with his straight-down-the-middle shooting. Even on the seventeenth, usually a cinch birdie four for the long hitters, and the one which Sam beat Jimmy Hines yesterday with an eagle three, Snead got no advantage. Sam was forty feet to the right of the pin with his No. 2 iron second, but Runyan more than matched that by coming five closer with a No. 4 wood. They halved the hole in birdies.

Still playing sub-par golf, Runyan made short work of his opponent as the afternoon round got under way. He went seven up early on the first nine and then increased it to eight at the tenth, or the twenty-eighth of the match. At the 360-yard next hole, Snead was out in front of Runyan by thirty yards with his drive. Both reached the green in two and the new champion missed his thirteen-footer, but Snead stepped up and failed to hold his eight-foot putt. Then Runyan stepped up and sank his short one and the match was all over.

SEATTLE RACE DRIVER WINS THE FEATURE

Bert Bloomgren Pilots Machine to Victory at Langford Speedway

Barely missing a nasty smash with Seattle's Stan Mahoney shortly after the beginning of the main event, Bert Bloomgren piloting Swede Linskog's No. Two Special shot clear of a field of six contestants, and succeeded in fighting off the determined bids of Chick Barbo, Seattle, to win the main race at the Langford Speedway last night.

Jumping to the fore after the cream-colored "jinx car" driven by Mahoney had broadsided into the fence on the second turn, Bloomgren succeeded in mastering the controls of a strange car sufficiently to best the rocket-like efforts of Barbo, Spaulding and Sutton. The unnumbered auto driven by Mahoney cracked up in Portland recently and has proved a "hoodoo special" to every driver running her in competitions, pit gossip reported.

GOOD PERFORMANCE

Generally featured by skillful driving last night's performance was one of the best turned in by track artists. Spins on the turns were frequent and never failed to bring the fans to their feet. Several races had to be started again after cars spun out of control on the corners while trying for too much speed.

Jack Spaulding nosed out a field of two other American drivers—Chuck Barbo and Stan Mahoney—to earn the checkered flag in the five-lap helmet dash between the three fastest cars in the time trials. Although Barbo made several attempts to narrow Spaulding's lead on the back stretch, the Seattle driver proved too competent a pilot to surrender without a fight. Time for the circuit was 1:34 6.

The following reverse handicap for the next three fastest cars took the form of a match race between Jimmy Laird, Bert Bloomgren and Bert Sutton. Sutton, after letting Bloomgren jam into first position on the first lap, gunned his engine on the back stretch to open a wide margin over his American rival and win the prize money for the event.

WINS HEAT

In the first heat Chuck Barbo shook off Jack Spaulding to cross the finishing line first, while Stan Mahoney was pressed to eke out a win over Jimmy Laird. Time was 3 12. In the second heat Jimmy Laird got a big hand from the crowd when he held off Sutton, Bloomgren and Wensley to romp home a well-deserved winner in the time of 3 18. Last night was the first time Laird had ever won an event on his home town track. Temporary breakdowns caused abandonment of the scheduled running of a local car and driver race.

Novelty race of the evening was a fifteen-lap exhibition match between eight bike riders from Victoria's top-flight cycle circles under the management of Torchy Pedon. Neil Duval, winner of The Colonist race, repeated his win with a total of twenty-three points for his sprint wins as compared to eleven points for Jack White, of Edmonton, and nine points for Gordon Bell, Victoria. Other entrants were Eric Whitehead, Ken Langrish, Elwood Perkins, Garfield Warren and Bill Court.

Toronto Boxer Poses With Champion

Lawn Bowling

The play-off match for the Whitney Cup in the Greater Victoria Lawn Bowling Association, between Canadian Pacific and Victoria Clubs, resulted in a tie and another match will be played later.

The scores follow:

TENNIS TOURNEY WILL OPEN SOON

DUNCAN, July 16.—The annual open tournament of the South Cowichan Tennis Club will be held next week, July 20 to 23.

The courts are in excellent shape and plans are being made for entertainment of all players. Titles at stake are the men's doubles and mixed doubles championships of Vancouver Island. Other events include men's and women's singles and women's doubles, as well as handicap events in men's and women's doubles, mixed doubles and veteran men's doubles. Present titleholders are P. Pearson, Vancouver, men's singles; Eleanor Young, Vancouver, women's singles; Pearson and Stan Hayden, Vancouver, men's doubles; Eleanor Young and Phyllis White McCrimmon, Vancouver, women's doubles, and Mrs. McCrimmon and Stan Hayden, mixed doubles. Entries close with the secretary, J. B. Aitken, Duncan, on Monday, and players from outside points must be on hand to begin play Thursday.

McCarthy, Babbish Reach Golf Final In Western Meet

SOUTH BEND, Ind., July 16 (AP).—Maurice McCarthy, of Cincinnati, and Robert Babbish, of Detroit, qualified today for the final of the western amateur golf championship tournament tomorrow. McCarthy defeating Thomas Sheehan, Jr., Chicago, 1 up, while Babbish eliminated Larry Voller, Quincy, Ill., 5 and 3.

Thus the final round will bring together two men who attained their golfing accomplishments as collegians. Babbish is a twenty-three-year-old sophomore at Detroit University, while McCarthy, who won his golfing fame while at Georgetown University, now is a thirty-one-year-old businessman at Cincinnati.

They will play thirty-six holes, eighteen in the morning and another eighteen in the afternoon.

Squads in Three Sections Enter Important Series In Quest of Titles—"A" Section Nines Have Keen Fight for Play-Off Berth

Play-off games in the three lower sections, and important fixtures in the senior "A" division will keep softball fans keyed up this week. Champions in "C" and "D" sections will be crowned during the week as sudden-death games will decide the titleholders in those divisions.

Replays of drawn games will provide plenty of excitement in the senior division with the Victoria Longshoremen, Burns & Co. and MacDonald Electric intensely interested in the outcome.

Emsco and Young Liberals, "B" section nines, will open their bids tomorrow evening for the right to battle the top-berth Colwood Wood squad. In the "C" section, the spotlight will shift to the Hollywood Club-Times' teams as they swing into action in the preliminary play-downs.

Alf Longley, assistant secretary, announced last night that throughout the play-offs each club must supply one new ball. Home team position will be decided by the toss of the coin.

Special Notice—Throughout the play-offs each team shall supply one new ball. Home team position to be decided by toss-up.

Teams Note—The new diamonds at Central Park are to be used for league schedule games only. It has been requested by the parks board that these diamonds not be used for practice games.

It is very important to the secretary that the results of the games be phoned in to E 4111 immediately following the game.

AMARK WINS P.N. TENNIS

San Francisco Player Defeats Dick Bennett in Tacoma Final

TACOMA, July 16 (AP).—Edwin Amark, of San Francisco, today won the men's singles championship in the Pacific Northwest tennis tournament here with a gruelling sixty-one-game victory over Richard (Dick) Bennett of Tacoma, former University of California player, seeded first.

The women's singles title went to Barbara Duncan, of Alameda, Cal., this morning when Helen Gurley, of Sacramento, defaulted in the final. Miss Duncan defeated Miss Gurley in the final of the junior girls' division Friday.

In doubles, the mixed title went to Golda Meyer Gross of Berkeley, and Bennett after they defeated Hazel Schenck, of Hood River, Ore., and Emery Neale, of Portland.

Mrs. Gross and Miss Duncan teamed to win the women's doubles Friday, while "Chip" Cheney, of Berkeley, was winning the boys' (under fifteen) championship.

The final men's doubles match was postponed until Sunday.

UNCONVINCED

Father (to Willie, whom he has caught smoking): "Willie, I'm surprised at you? When I was your age I never smoked. You'll never be able to say that to your little boys when you grow up." "No, daddy. I don't s'pose I shall. At least, not with such a straight face as you do anyway."

MANY VISIT TWIN CITIES

Alberni and Port Alberni Are Centre of Lovely Holiday District

The excellent highway across the Alberni hills has now brought the twin cities of Alberni and Port Alberni within easy reach of Victoria. Quiet and peaceful Alberni appears basking in the Summer sunshine beside the Somass River, yet with well equipped stores, garages and hotels to serve the visitors. Right on the main street is Kempe's Tea Rooms, serving delicious lunches and meals, soda fountain service, confectionery and tobaccos and kodak supplies.

RAIL TERMINUS

Port Alberni, two miles farther on and the terminus of the E. & N. Railway, is more lively, with up-to-date mills and a large wharf to give the city the name of an industrial centre. Excellent hotels, restaurants, stores and garages are well equipped to fill the visitors' needs and information for tourists is readily available.

Both Alberni and Port Alberni form the centre of a thousand spots of beauty and historical interest. Hunting and fishing are unsurpassed and golf and tennis are within easy reach. Good roads throughout the district make it easy to move from point to point.

SPROAT LAKE

Sproat Lake, nine and a half miles from Port Alberni, forms an ideal playground and is visited by hundreds of tourists and holiday bound Victorians each year. While it is only sixteen miles in length, it has a coast line estimated to be some 140 miles, so indented is it with bays, arms and coves.

Fishing is ideal and the scenery, with the snow-capped peaks in the distance, is famous the world over. Sport is excellent, either trolling on the body of the lake or casting a fly from the sand bars of the little creeks and streams that empty into the water.

STAMP FALLS

Stamp Falls, one of the well-known beauty spots of the area, has greatly improved with the construction of trails, parks, camping facilities, etc., by the Government. A good road leads into this beauty spot, which in the past was somewhat hard to reach.

COMOX AREA FINE RESORT

Elk Hotel Stands in Ideal Holiday District—Farms Overlook Sea

Only three miles from Courtenay, across the Comox harbor, the district of Comox offers the holiday seeker the restful peace of green rolling fields, serene beauty of its surrounding waters and the quiet of a rolling valley where life moves leisurely under the smiling beauty of the Summer sun. The Comox Peninsula is a long neck of land where the green of the well-cultivated fields contrast with the dark hues of oak and fir.

The view from Comox across Union Bay and back to the main body of Vancouver Island is superb. Snowcapped mountain peaks behind the city of Courtenay stand out in varying array, while farther away the tall spire of Mount Arrowsmith can be clearly seen. Down the sound, islands and islets in varying shapes and sizes are visible, while along the horizon the giant snow peaks of the Mainland gleam whitely in the Summer sun.

The Elk Hotel at Comox needs no introduction to those who travel to the north of the Island. Situated as it is on the edge of the shore, nestled deep in the shade of great swaying maples, with shady verandas looking out on the water and the incomparable view, it is an ideal stopping place for a day, week or the entire Summer. There is a friendly atmosphere about the comfortable lounge, a grace and dignity in its fine appointments that please the most fastidious and make the Elk Hotel justly famous. Drawing as it does from the surrounding districts for its dairy products and many of its table needs, the cuisine is such as will be remembered for delicious, wholesome and daintily served meals.

The Comox valley offers sport and entertainment for all. There is fishing of every sort within easy reach; boating, tennis and swimming and an excellent golf course a short distance away.

She: "If wishes come true, what would be your first?"

He: "I would wish—ah, if I only dared to tell you!"

She: "Go on, go on. What do you suppose I brought up wishing for?"

Beautiful Scenery at Forbidden Plateau

IMPROVEMENTS MADE IN HOTEL

Somass Undergoes Complete Redecoration, Adding to Accommodation and Comfort

The Somass Hotel, for forty years a standard of service and comfort for travelers to the Albernis, has now undergone extensive alterations and complete redecoration which will completely modernize the well-known hostel. The work has been undertaken on the instructions of A. E. Waterhouse and has been carried out under the direction of Jack Hayes, manager of the hotel.

Those familiar with the hotel in the past will remember that the lobby was formerly reached by a flight of stairs from the street. The alterations have included the construction of a ground floor lobby, opening directly onto the sidewalk and the original lobby and hallway has been converted into added bedroom space.

The exterior finish is now of brick veneer which harmonizes well with the architectural design. An elevator has been installed, serving all floors. In the spacious dining-room the bay windows have been enlarged, making it light and airy.

The redecoration has been carried out in every room and new Simmons beds are standard equipment.

The Somass Hotel, now as in the past, is the centre of a thriving area, offering the best of service and information to visitors.

COFFEE SHOP IS POPULAR ASSET

The Malaspina Hotel, overlooking the Nanaimo Harbor, is known throughout the country as a fully modern and up-to-date hotel, offering comfortable accommodation on a par with that found anywhere. The beautiful outlook across the water is one that harmonizes well with the quality found in every detail of furnishings and service.

In order to give the visitor an even higher standard of service, an addition was made last year of the Malaspina Coffee Shop. Reached from the pavement close to the main entrance of the hotel, or from the main lobby, this is thoroughly up to date in every way, offering fountain and counter service which leaves nothing to be desired. The success achieved since the inception of this addition has been most gratifying.

A LITTLE DIFFERENCE

And the difference between learning to drive a car and learning to play golf is that when you are learning to drive a car you sometimes hit something.

ROAD LEADING TO CAMERON LAKE IS NOTED FOR BEAUTY

Mountain Resort on Pacific Highway Holds Every Advantage of Scenery and Sport Together With Ease of Access—Qualicum Falls Lovely Sight

FEW more beautiful drives can be found anywhere on Vancouver Island than that from Parksville or Qualicum over the Alberni Summit to the twin cities of Alberni and Port Alberni. The Pacific Highway, as the road to the Albernis is officially known, is reached from Parksville, where it joins the Island Highway, or from Qualicum, via the Hilliers Road, in itself a drive of more than ordinary beauty through woods and fields.

MUCH BEAUTY

Leaving the farming communities of Coombs and Hilliers behind, the Pacific Highway reaches a wonderland of beauty as it enters the Cameron Lake district. Cameron Lake itself is a lovely sight with huge trees running down to a shingly beach. On the farther side the mountain rises sheer from the water's edge, mirrored in the calm surface. The variegated colors of the lake are a source of wonder to the visitor, for the reflections throw back the blue of the sky overhead, the green of the foliage and the slate grey of the solid walls of rock.

LOVELY FALLS

Cameron Lake forms the headwaters of the Little Qualicum River and a short distance away are the Little Qualicum Falls. A tremendous amount of work has been done by Government parties this last Winter, improving the road into the falls, clearing away the undergrowth to form a natural park and constructing bridges, seats, tables, kitchens and every facility to accommodate visitors and picnic parties. The majestic beauty of the scenery has been enhanced by the work done and it is now possible to gain a perfect view of the impressive falls in perfect safety.

MOUNT ARROWSMITH

A trail leads from Cameron Lake to the summit of Mount Arrowsmith, a steady ascent which entails no real mountaineering and which is rewarded by a wonderful view of the countryside.

At the head of Cameron Lake stands the Cameron Lake Chalet, known far and wide as offering first rate accommodation amid lovely surroundings. Fishing is good and rowboats are available, while the surrounding woods are interlaced with trails that invite exploration. The elevation imparts invigoration to the air and the Chalet holds all the advantages of a mountain resort, while only a few miles by good road from Qualicum and Parksville, with their attendant facilities for golf and recreation.

CATHEDRAL GROVE

Not far from the Chalet is the famous "Tall Timber" or "Cathedral Grove," where the natural growth of Douglas fir, hemlock, cedar and spruce rear their stately heads two hundred feet or more. The mossy, park-like area is free from undergrowth and the spectator gazes down dim aisles lined by massive tree trunks, with here and there only the light green of a huckleberry bush to break the vista.

PILOT DIES AFTER CRASH ON RACETRACK

MOOSOMIN, Sask., July 16 (CP).—Robert L. Gibson, twenty-five-year-old Brandon, Man., pilot, died in hospital here today of injuries received when his plane crashed into the race track here July 1.

Gibson crashed his plane into the track rather than hit a holiday crowd below when it went out of control as he was stunting.

Taking Lumber for United Kingdom

The Dutch motorship Alphard was alongside Ogden Point Piers during the latter part of the past week, loading lumber for the Old Country. The Alphard is one of the most modernly-equipped freighters to call at the local dock, where she is seen loading from car and scow, stowing the commodity fore and aft at the same time. Her skipper is Captain Cornelius Spuy. The Alphard is owned in Rotterdam and was built in Germany.

YACHTS HAVE LIGHT WINDS

Ripples, Penguin and Klatawa Take First Places In Club Regatta

Winners in yesterday's matinee events of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club at Cadboro Bay were Ripplees, Penguin and Klatawa. The going was disappointing to the contestants on the whole, the southerly wind which promised fair sport at starting time fading away shortly after the boats got away, eventually switching to light airs from the North after a considerable period of calm had been experienced. The northerly zephyrs did not serve, however, to get the boats around in the time set, so the judges decided to award the points at stake to the boats crossing the finish line on the first round.

All boats were to sail the course three times around. The stars were allowed to try and negotiate the second round, but when the dinghies and snipes reached the starting line on their first round they were given the winning guns. Unable to finish the course twice within the time allowance, the racing committee decided the time of the stars taken at the first round would determine the winners.

LEEWARD COURSE

With the southerly breeze blowing at the start, the committee concluded to make the course a leeward one, a mark being set near the west end of the bay, the other marks being the beach buoy off the far end and a mark off Cattle Point.

The star boats finished in the following order: Ripples, Halkett, 4:30:15; Aquila, Packford, 4:30:40; Aura, Balvtrop, 4:31:04; Boykin, Blandy, 4:47:10. Dinghies arrived as follows: Penguin, Ashe, 4:44; Klamet, Gann, 4:4 ; Puffin, Johnson, 4:48:17; Oh-Way, Hincks, 4:48:50; Dabchick, Beeching, 4:49:10; Tern, Campbell, 4:49:23; Bandicoot, Heal, 4:51:03. The snipes finished as follows: Klatawa, Ward, 4:46:30; P.D.Q., Griffin, 4:49:37; Pelican, Moran, 4:53.

The sailing committee comprised Captain Johnson, J. O Healy and J. B. Acland.

NOTICE TO MARINERS

Seattle Shipyards Are Seeking Construction of Four Proposed Liners

SEATTLE, July 16 (AP).—Construction of the four $5,000,000 passenger-cargo liners, authorized for the Seattle-Orient trade by the Maritime Commission, will be sought for Seattle shipyards, P. E. Harris, president of the newly incorporated Pacific Northwest-Orient line, said today.

Harris, heading the special Chamber of Commerce committee working to assure continued American flag service out of Seattle to the Far East, said application would be made immediately for a managing agency to operate any ships which may be assigned here temporarily.

ONTARIO OFFICER ORDERS INQUEST

Inquiry to Be Made Into Death of Mrs. Maybelle Sidley at Toronto

TORONTO, July 16 (CP).—Attorney-General Gordon Conant last night ordered an inquest into the death of Mrs. Maybelle Horlick Sidney, wealthy sixty-one-year-old heiress who died in Toronto ten days ago.

The inquest decision followed a conference between Mr. Conant and police officials. No reason was given for ordering the inquest, which was set for July 26.

An autopsy, performed with the permission of Mrs. Sidley's son, William, showed death was due to natural causes.

Terms of Mrs Sidley's will disposing of a $4,000,000 estate, were made public yesterday at Racine, Wis. W. Perkins Bull, K.C., Toronto, a friend of the family, was bequeathed more than $1,250,000, including a third of the residuary estate. Mrs. Sidley's son left another third. The remainder is to be distributed among various individuals and institutions.

"What is the matter, my man?" he inquired.

"I've got bad news from 'ome, sir."

"I'm very sorry to hear that; what is it?"

"My brother, sir," replied the man, bitterly, "'as gone into the workhouse, sir; the first of our family to disgrace us."

VANCOUVER SHIPPING

VANCOUVER, July 16 (CP).—The steamship President McKinley, American Mail Lines' passenger vessel, will arrive here at 8 a.m., Tuesday. It will be the first time a ship of that line has called at the port of Vancouver.

Motorship Dagmar Salen, new ship of the Salen Line to the Orient, arrived at New Westminster today, first vessel of the line to arrive on this coast.

The Vancouver hearing of Terminal Elevator rates has been postponed until July 22, it was announced today.

The Canadian Pacific steamer Princess Alice had been chartered for a cruise to Prince Rupert and return by 190 staff members of the California-Western States Life Insurance Company.

Harold Northey, second officer aboard the steamship Pacific Shipper, was taken to hospital here, suffering from injuries to his ankle, sustained at Victoria. He will rejoin his ship when she sails Wednesday.

Cargo brought here aboard Pacific Shipper included 3,000 stems of bananas and general cargo.

Halibut sales on the Vancouver Fish Exchange today: Kamchatka, 6,000 chicken at 5.2 cents, 14,000 medium at 7 cents, 170 large at 7.3 cents, and 500 ling cod at 3 cents.

MILLIONS OF FISH APPEAR

Weight of Pilchards Is Too Great for Purse Seiner's Nets

ABERDEEN, Wash., July 16 (AP).—First reports of a huge pilchard run off the Washington Coast were brought into Gray's Harbor today by the purse seiner Umpqua.

The seiner cleared Gary's Harbor Thursday after a fruitless month off Reedsport, Oregon, and a week's fishing off Gray's Harbor that saw not a single fish taken aboard.

Yesterday, however, she encountered millions of the small fish, laid out her seine and snared so many that the crew could not haul the net in. The purse was damaged and the catch lost. A second attempt ended the same way. Today the crew is patching gear for another try.

LARGE SALMON CATCH

JUNEAU, Alaska, July 16 (AP).—Alaska Fisheries Agent L. G. Wingard estimated the 1938 Alaska salmon pack at 6,000,000 cases yesterday. Wingard said the Bristol Bay Canneries passed the 1,000,000-case mark Thursday.

The time used is Pacific standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

SHIP'S BOTTOM BADLY DAMAGED

U.S. Motorvessel Brant Is Ashore on Williams Reef, Western Alaska

SEATTLE, July 16 (AP). — Coast guard division headquarters reported the United States Fisheries Bureau motorship Brant stranded on Williams Reef, eight miles east of Kodiak harbor, Western Alaska. She first wirelessed she was sinking, but later reported her bottom badly damaged and the leak controlled. She grounded in a heavy fog.

The naval airplane carrier Wright and minesweeper Teal were standing by.

She sailed from here July 2 to carry Dr. Ernest Gruening, Commissioner of Territories; Rep. Millward E. Caldwell, of Florida, and Fisheries Commissioner Frank T. Bell to Seward. They were not aboard when she stranded, having transferred to the coast guard cutter Ingham after a recent flight to Bristol Bay. They were to have returned here, however, aboard the Brant.

Stocks Again in Upward Push in New York Mart

NEW YORK, July 16 (AP).—For the third time in the past two weeks the stock market today assaulted the portals of the June-July recovery peaks and failed to break through.

While the list pushed up fractions to more than a point at the start of the brief session—steels, motors, coppers and specialties were favored—profit selling just before the close cut down extreme gains substantially. At the top, however, a number of new year's highs were posted.

Despite belated pressure from traders who wished to cash in over the week-end, The Associated Press average of sixty issues emerged with a net gain of .4 of a point at 48.2, or .2 of a point under the top mark for 1938 posted July 1. On the week the composite was up .6 of a point.

The activity was slightly ahead of last Saturday—transfers totaled 627,270 shares, against 592,000.

A number of corporate bonds were in demand at higher prices today, but the market generally prolonged its wait in a narrow range.

The Associated Press composite price of ten industrial bonds touched a new 1938 top at 98.9, up .2 of a point. Rail and foreign averages eased slightly.

Dollar bonds also held around previous levels.

DOW JONES AVERAGES

Thirty industrials, 138.51, up 1.21.
Twenty rails, 27.18, up 0.05.
Fifteen utilities, 21.39, up 0.04.
Forty bonds, 89.06, up 0.09.

AIRCRAFT BUYING AID TO MARKET

MONTREAL, July 16 (CP).—An otherwise weak market was strengthened here today by heavy buying in aircrafts, toward the close. Steel of Canada moved up ¼, both common and preferred, equalling their former peak.

Canadian Car strengthened a point to 16¼ and National Steel Car 5 points to 57.

HAVILAH MINE WORK RESUMED

Original Developers of Privateer Assume Control Of Property

Work has started again at the Havilah Mine on China Creek about fourteen miles southwest of Port Alberni.

Development of the property has been taken over by D. S. Tait, Ray A. Pitre, Joseph Pedneault and Louis Pedneault, the original Privateer group who developed the Privateer Mine to production. This group has obtained an option on the remaining treasury shares of the Havilah Company to give them approximately 55 per cent interest in the property when the option shall have been completed.

Thorough examination of the property has been made on behalf of the financing group, and they report that the results were eminently satisfactory.

PERSONNEL ARRANGED

In order to be able to attend to the development of the Havilah Mine, Mr. Pitre has arranged to be freed of the bulk of his duties at Privateer Mine, where W. J. Murray, formerly mine foreman, has been made assistant manager; G. F. MacDonnell of the Connell Mining & Exploration Company remains engineer-in-charge, with N. E. McConnell as his assistant. These arrangements will enable Mr. Pitre to devote most of his time and attention to the management of Man-O-War Mines Limited and Havilah Mine Limited. D. S. Tait will act as secretary for the Havilah operation, and the business management of the company will be transferred to the offices of Tait & Marchant, where the Privateer and Man-O-War business is conducted.

"Slim" Munro, well-known mine operator of the Bridge River area, has been employed to act as mine foreman at the Havilah Mine under Mr. Pitre. A competent crew of miners has already been engaged and sent up to the mine. W. J. Ryan, well-known packer of the Portland Canal area, has been employed to attend to the transportation and has already sent in a string of horses and a truck.

COMPRESSOR INSTALLED

A compressor has been purchased and is already being installed. Meantime, a capable crew of hand miners are working two shifts on the Gillespie vein until such time as the compressor plant is completely installed and ready to deliver air.

The contract between the development group and Havilah Gold Mines Limited provides for development of the mine and the ultimate equipment of a mill of at least 25 tons capacity.

METALS FEATURE TORONTO MARKET

TORONTO, July 16 (CP). — Highlights of the Toronto share market in the closing session of the week were in the base metal and the steel groups, while a generally strong tone ruled over the board except in the Western oils, which closed with minor losses. The base metal share index mounted 1.29 to a new high for the year at 92.73, and the industrial share index gained 1.06. Golds were up .23.

Waite-Amulet advanced 60 cents to a new high at $7.10. The close at 6.95 was up 45 cents. International Nickel and Hudson Bay posted minor gains and the cheaper base metals were steady.

A rising quotation again marked Eldorado's performance, and other silvers were quiet. Gold issues maintained an even tone; Chesterville was a feature and it closed 8 cents up at 1.64. Gains of 5 to 10 cents were boarded by McWatters, Mining Corporation, O'Brien, Preston and Teck-Hughes. Senior golds were steady.

National Steel Car closed at 56 for a new gain of 4½. Canadian Foundry common and Steel of Canada also sold at new high prices for the year. Foods and utilities were mainly firm and the beverages leaned to the down side. Walkers common dropped ¼ point.

A soft tone in the Western oil group set Royalite back 1¾ in broken lot trades and the close was down 1½ to 3 cents for Home, Davies and Okalta.

WHEAT FUTURES IN SLIDE LOWER

WINNIPEG, July 16 (CP).—Winnipeg wheat futures closed a disastrous week today by sliding 3-8 to 7-8 lower to bring losses of the past six days to 1-8 to 3 1-8 cents.

Complete inactivity marked today's session. Final quotations placed July at 97 1-8, October 76 1-2, November 76 1-4 and December 75 cents. Prices through most of the session hovered near yesterday's close.

Liverpool recovered from early losses to move 5-8 to 1-8d higher. Buenos Aires was slightly higher.

Cash wheat exporters were again in the market for durums and spreads were quoted 1-2 better at top levels. Actual sales of coarse grains were confined to minor amount of oats and barley.

USING SMELL TO SELL

If you can remember back to one of the early "Music Box Reviews" you may recall a song about "Orange Blossom Time in California." As the tenor sang it, the theatre was filled with the fragrance of orange blossoms. You heard the song through your nose as well as your ears.

This appeal to the sense of smell has been used hundreds of times, and is always effective. A New York nut shop wafts the tempting aroma of its roasting nuts out to passers-by through a grill at the top of the show window.

A Michigan store sold 1,800 pounds of peppermints in one day by circulating the peppermint smell through the entire premises with an electric fan.

A restaurant owner also used a fan to blow the fragrance of his brewing coffee outside the door, attracting people who otherwise would not have come in to eat.

Even products that do not ordinarily have an attractive smell are being deodorized and given pleasing smells—such items as rubber baby pants or elastic girdles. Silks are made to smell like flowers, and Christmas cards carry the scent of evergreen trees. Paint is losing its historic smell. A large paint manufacturer has found a way to deodorize his product.

Thus nose appeal has added sales appeal to a multitude of things.

"ALBUM"—A WHITE TABLET

Commencements are over, the graduates are getting their last fling at a nice Summer vacation before undertaking the lugubrious study of the "Help Wanted" columns, and the albums have been carefully laid away to accumulate the dust from which they may never emerge.

The album, family or otherwise, has in all times been a modern institution, but it is a far cry from the common to the original meaning of this word in which is embodied curious bits of history of Roman antiquity, the middle ages and the ever-passing present.

"Album," then, is an easily recognizable form of the Latin albus white. In ancient Rome it was the name of "a white tablet" on which things were inscribed, especially upon which the Pontifex Maximus or Chief Priest recorded the events of the year or the Praetor his imponderible edicts.

The significance of the word accommodated itself to the changing times; by the middle ages, it included among its senses that of a register of saints or soldiers—and a "letter" presumably because the message was written on a "white" background, that is on white paper or parchment.

Slowly "album" developed the ramified sense it bears today—a bound volume designed variously to contain family photographs, autographs, scraps of paper, lists of names, memorial writings of friends and classmates, in fact almost any memorabilia.

"Time All Honest Folks Were in Bed"

C.C.F. Will Hold Summer School at Gabriola Island

"Family Week," July 23 to July 30, will open the C.C.F. Summer School this season with special attractions for fathers, mothers and young folks, and special consideration for the family budget.

Gabriola Island is again the spot chosen for the school, and all the former attractions will be in evidence, plus others which have been devised by the committee during the Winter months. The organization, economic, cultural and social aspects have been planned for, and added comfort and convenience will mark the new season's activities.

Following the national C.C.F. convention, which is being held this month in Edmonton, the following persons will attend the second and third weeks of the school: J. S. Woodsworth, M.P., national leader; E. J. Garland, national organizer; D. Lewis, national secretary; Angus McInnis, M.P.; Grant MacNeil, M.P.; Wallis Lefeaux, provincial president, and others. A special feature of the week-end, August 6 and 7, will be "The C.C.F. Cabinet in Session," when all the C.C.F. Provincial M.P.P.'s will be present.

Business and Professional Directory, Want Ads

The Daily Colonist

RATES FOR CLASSIFIED OR WANT ADVERTISEMENTS

Two cents a word each insertion; twelve cents a word a week, with a minimum of ten words, cash with order. No advertisements accepted for less than twenty-five cents.

Death and Funeral Notices, $1.50 first insertion; $1.00 for each additional insertion. Marriages, Cards of Thanks and In Memoriam Notices, $1.50 per insertion.

Birth Notices, $1.00 per insertion.

Advertisers who desire may have replies addressed to a box at The Colonist and forwarded to their private address. A charge of ten cents is made for mailing replies. In this case add three words ("Box...... Colonist") to the count for the number of words.

Out-of-town readers of our advertisements ask advertisers to give address as well as phone numbers, as it is not always possible to communicate through the phone.

Any claim for rebate on account of errors or omissions must be made within thirty days from the date of the same, otherwise the claim will not be allowed.

The Colonist will not be responsible for more than one incorrect insertion of any advertisement ordered for more than one issue.

The Colonist service is available every day from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., excepting Sunday. Just call Empire 4114.

To insure insertion, Classified Ads should reach The Colonist before 10 p.m. on the day previous to publication.

Classified Ads for The Sunday Colonist will be accepted up to 10 p.m. on Saturdays.

1 BIRTHS

TIDBURY—To Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Tidbury (nee Ella George), 2060 Carrick St., a son, at the Jubilee Hospital, July 16.

CARLSON—To Mr. and Mrs. Friend Carlson (nee Charlotte Bantly), on July 14, at Long Beach, California, twins, a son and daughter.

2 DEATHS

STACEY—Suddenly on July 14, 1938, at his home, Brentwood, Harold Ewart Garnet (Bob) Stacey, born in England. He is survived by three brothers, Percy Stacey, Victoria; Eric Stacey, Hollywood, and Sidney Stacey and one sister in England.
The remains are reposing in Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel pending funeral arrangements. (No flowers, by request.)

SMITH—At St. Joseph's Hospital, on July 15, 1938, Miss Selina Frances Smith, of 104 Dallas Road, aged eighty-four years, born in London, Ontario, and a resident of Victoria for seventy-four years. She is survived by two brothers, Garrett and Hamilton Smith, of Victoria.
The remains are resting in Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel, where funeral services will be held on Monday at 2.15 p.m. Very Rev. Spencer Hayward Elliott, Dean of Columbia, officiating. Interment in the family plot in Ross Bay Cemetery.

THOMPSON—At the Royal Jubilee Hospital on July 15, 1938, William Thompson, of 742 Lampson Street, aged seventy-one years, born in Belfast, Ireland, and a resident of Victoria since 1896. He leaves to mourn his loss, besides his wife, at home, four sons, Charles Stewart Thompson, Ashcroft, B.C.; John W. Thompson, North Vancouver; James Kenneth Thompson and Herbert K. Thompson, in Victoria; four daughters, Mrs. A. G. Fuler, Victoria; Mrs. S. Bell, Vancouver; Mrs. J. Hedley, Port Alberni, and Mrs. F. Morgan, Victoria; six grandchildren, two brothers, one in Victoria and one in Toronto, also two sisters in Ireland.
The remains are resting in Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel, where funeral services will be held on Tuesday at 2.30 p.m., Rev. James Hood officiating. Interment in the family plot in Ross Bay Cemetery.

EDWARDS—Passed away suddenly, at the family residence, 1331 Hampshire Road, July 15, Mrs. Elizabeth Edwards, aged eighty-three years, widow of the late Charles Edwards. The late Mrs. Edwards was a native of London, England, and had resided in Victoria for nine years, a former resident of Winnipeg and Indian Head, Sask. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons, George Edwards, Courtenay, V.I.; Charles A., Indian Head, Sask., and John Edwards, of Regina; and four daughters, Miss Nell Edwards, at 1331 Hampshire Road, Oak Bay; Mrs. A. E. Wilson, Parksville; Mrs. E. C. Hunt, West Summerland, and Mrs. V. N. Williams, Cobble Hill.
The funeral has been arranged to take place from the Thomson Funeral Home on Monday, July 18, at 2 o'clock. Rev. F. R. Dredge will conduct the service, after which the remains will be laid at rest in the family plot in the Royal Oak Burial Park.
Winnipeg and Regina papers please copy.

4 CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. H. T. Gravlin and family wish to thank their many friends for the beautiful floral offerings and kind messages of sympathy during their recent sad bereavement; also the nursing staff of the Royal Jubilee Hospital and to Dr. Lennox for their tender care during the illness of a loving husband and father.

I wish to extend my sincere thanks and appreciation for the many kindnesses, messages of love and understanding, and beautiful floral offerings received from my friends at the passing of Billie. Especially do I wish to thank the members of Provincial Police, the Sisters and Nurses at St. Joseph's Hospital and Dr. Luke, also the Poor Clare Nuns, and the Sisters of St. Ann's Academy for their kindness.—Edna McIntosh.

IMMIGRATION IS ENDORSED

R. D. Harvey Says Hornby Plan Found Favor Before Conservative Convention

British Columbia, which sent seventy delegates to the convention of the National Conservative Party, supplied one of the main resolutions carried at the three-day gathering, Robert D. Harvey, president of the Victoria Conservative Association, said on his return to the city yesterday from the East. This was the resolution upon Empire policy and assisted British immigration.

As president of the Victoria organization, Mr. Harvey said he would call a meeting of city Conservatives to set before them the text of the many resolutions carried at the convention, as soon as these are to hand in printed form. Island delegates to the convention will be invited to the meeting, to be held later in the Summer.

Mr. Harvey drew attention to the resolution dealing with immigration, which, he said, was in substance the Hornby plan. Passing unanimously, this resolution read as follows:

RESOLUTION CITED

"Be it resolved: A. This party recognizes the unity of Canada under Confederation and that her future lies within the British Empire, under the Crown.

"B. In order to insure the continuance of the British connection and Canada's participation in the benefits that accrue from membership in the British Commonwealth of Nations, and the economic welfare and safety of Canada, this party recognizes the immediate necessity of our Government approaching the Government of the United Kingdom and discussing and deciding upon a policy for the selected migration of British families from Great Britain and Ireland, under a carefully prepared plan, whereby ample and proper provision will be made for British financing and supervision, and the return of families found unable to fit into the national and economic life of Canada; and be it further understood that similar advantages be extended to France.

"C. That we are opposed to any scheme of immigration that will multiply the difficulties of unemployment."

CHOICE OF LEADER

Mr. Harvey referred to the choice of Dr. Manion as leader of the National Conservative Party, and said that no man could be better equipped to bring harmony within the ranks of Conservatives throughout Canada.

The outstanding part taken by young Conservatives at the convention also drew his praise. British Columbia, Mr. Harvey said in conclusion, sent seventy delegates to the gathering, and made effective representations.

TO STUDY STARS IN SUMMER SKY

Astronomical Society Is to Begin Holiday Lecture Series on July 25

The annual Summer course conducted by the Royal Astronomical Society in Victoria begins its series of lectures next week, Monday, July 25.

This Summer course was inaugurated a few years ago as an experiment in educational astronomy, and has proved so popular that it is now an established activity of the society. The purpose of the course is to foster an acquaintance with astronomy, especially among those with little or no familiarity with the subject. Each meeting begins with a short and non-technical talk upon some astronomical body or subject and then the meeting proceeds outof-doors to learn constellations and to recognize stars and planets from actual experience. Several excellent telescopes are available, providing magnified views of the planets, double stars, star clusters and the moon.

FIRST MEETING

The first meeting devotes its lecture-period to the constellations, their forms and mythology, and methods whereby one may learn to recognize them in the sky. Following this are lectures upon the sun, planets, star-clouds, along with two more practical evenings.

At one of these a member of the society will tell, from first-hand experience, how any amateur may make his own telescope. An example of such an instrument, built in the society's telescope-making section, will be demonstrated. The other "highlight" will take the form of a trip to the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory to inspect the equipment there and view the heavens through the great reflector. By special arrangement this evening is devoted to the society and offers a unique opportunity to use the facilities of the institution.

The meetings are held in the grounds and buildings of Victoria College. The beautiful setting and clear view make this an ideal spot for those who wish, during the Summer, to "learn their way about" in the heavens.

p.m. He died without uttering a word.

Thus ended one of the most spectacular careers in the modern world of business, finance and adventure. Insull as a twenty-year-old English clerk had gone to the United States in 1880, had worked for a time with the late Thomas A. Edison, and then had gone to Chicago to build one of the world's great financial structures.

EMPIRE COLLAPSED

In 1932, after Insull had amassed a personal fortune estimated at $100,000,000, his vast empire collapsed, and he fled to Europe as embezzlement proceedings were started against him and his brother, Martin. He eventually returned to face trial and was acquitted, but his ruling days were over.

In his pocket at death he had only 30 francs—84 cents—and he had not used even this for the taxi ride his wife wanted him to take.

Insull arrived in Paris on Monday, having sailed from Montreal on a Canadian liner. He and Mrs. Insull had taken quarters in the downtown hotel where they invariably stayed on their frequent visits here.

ELEANOR YOUNG IN STATE MEET

SEATTLE, July 16 (AP). — The Washington State tennis tournament will open tomorrow at the Seattle Tennis Club courts in Firloch, with junior singles as first event.

In the women's division, Eleanor Young, Vancouver, appeared the strongest Pacific Northwest contender against Californians who include Barbara Duncan, Helen Gourley and Daphne Buckell. Present titlist is Helen Wright, Seattle.

Russ Hawes, Vancouver, was among those most highly favored for the junior sectional singles with Neil Ballard, Seattle, as a strong contender.

Indian All-Stars To Meet Canucks

Canucks will oppose an all-star Indian aggregation of stickhandlers this afternoon at Hampton Road Park at 3 o'clock in an exhibition box lacrosse fixture.

Ted Menzies will referee.

DEAN PITCHES TODAY

CHICAGO, July 16 (AP). — Dizzy Dean, whose ailing arm has kept him inactive since May 3, will go to the mound for the Chicago Cubs tomorrow—and on his performance may hang Chicago's chances of getting back into the National League pennant fight.

WINNERS AT COLWOOD

Mrs. S. Enke came in with a card of 88-8—80 to win "A" class honors in the July medal competition at the Colwood Golf Club. Mrs. D. Spencer headed "B" division with a score of 101-21—80.

CHAPTER XIX

Had District Attorney Laine known it, Jed Patrick could have saved him all the trouble of checking up on Moleen. Early in the afternoon Jed had gone over to Brooklyn for the express purpose of finding out what possible connection his mascot could have with Charlie Farro.

It troubled his conscience no little to pry into Moleen's affairs. But he eased it by assuring himself he had only her interest at heart. After all, she had no one to protect her, and because he had nominated himself Dutch uncle it was up to him to find out if Farro really was the type of man who would be up to no good.

Jed felt he owed it to Mignon as well. She was too nice and generous a person to be imposed upon by any one who would take unfair advantage of her.

That morning he had signed a contract with Joe Elting which guaranteed more money than he'd hoped to ever see in an entire lifetime. But he felt he couldn't even celebrate until the Farro-Moleen mystery was solved.

Remembering a newspaper reporter he had met a few weeks before, he decided to go to The Brooklyn Democrat and see if he could pick up any information about Charlie there. Lynne Banker was a first cousin of one of his best friends in the little Kentucky college, and could certainly be trusted to keep a confidence.

On the way over in the subway, Jed took the envelope from his pocket upon which Joe Elting had scribbled his idea of the way Joe should be billed. He read, grinning boyishly:

JED PATRICK
THE GENTLEMAN HILLBILLY
With SUNNY TUCKER
SWINGSTERS

Elting was planning a radio audition in a few days, and was even going to see a friend of his about a screen test. Elting wanted him to stress comedy, for which he had a fine flare, and used as many funny Southern numbers as he could cram into his repertoire. Jed thanked his lucky stars his new manager didn't insist upon a hick costume, for he was certain that, even for much-needed money, he couldn't make a laughing stock out of his mountain people.

The "Gentleman Hillbilly!" Not bad, Jed told himself, grinning again. Wouldn't he have a surprise for the folks back home when the ads came out and he could send his clippings and pictures from the papers! Only his mother had been sure her boy had a great talent that would be recognized. If it hadn't been for her, he would have lived and died on the dairy farm in Kentucky.

Fortunately Lynne Banker was at his desk in the city room when Jed sent in his name. Lynne seemed pleasantly surprised to see his cousin's old friend. When he learned Jed had something to discuss with him in confidence he suggested they go across the street for a beer.

At a table in the corner, Jed came straight to the point. Had Banker ever heard of a Brooklyn attorney by the name of Farro? The police reporter sat up in surprise.

"Have I? I'm working on him now. What do you know about him?"

Jed explained, feeling a little foolish, that he was interested in Farro only because he had a hunch a little friend of his was afraid of him. And also that Farro had worked his way into the affections of the district attorney's daughter, and he had a feeling that Farro was up to no good.

"Are you telling me that Charlie Farro is rushing Tom Laine's daughter?"

"That's it."

Banker whistled.

"Whew! This is a beat!" Then he remembered Jed was talking off the record and grinned regretfully. "I'm always stumbling across scoops that can't be used. That's what I get for having a conscience."

Briefly Jed sketched the story of Moleen and her recent meeting with Farro, and of how fast events had moved during the week. Then he asked Banker:

"Have you ever heard of a girl named Moleen O'Dare?"

The reporter nodded.

"Pat O'Dare's sister. I went to the same church with the O'Dare kids when I lived in the old neighborhood. What about her?"

"She is the girl I'm interested in. The one Farro is annoying."

Banker exploded.

"Now this begins to make sense! It hooks right in with the tip I got yesterday—that Farro is the brains back of the Rafetti gang."

SYRACUSE WINS

Establishing an 8-1 lead in the opening session, Vic Simpson's Syracuse stickhandlers defeated Esquimalt, 13-8, in an intermediate box lacrosse game Friday evening at Victoria West Park. It was the first victory of the season for the lodgemen, but on their showing it will not be the last.

Mixed Greensomes

Next Thursday evening, commencing at 5 o'clock, another of the popular mixed greensomes competition will be held at the Victoria Golf Club, followed by a buffet supper and dance in the clubhouse. Players will choose their partners, arrange for their opponents and also starting times. Post entries will be accepted. Members wishing to invite a visitor or member of another club may do so without payment of green fees. Competitors are asked to sign on the board in the clubhouse if they intend to take part.

NO. 183—EIGHTIETH YEAR VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA, SUNDAY, JULY 17, 1938

Spotting FOREST FIRES

ANYONE can tell you that where there is smoke there is fire, but it takes a Forest Ranger to tell you that smoke in the forest does not always mean a forest fire. For instance the ranger for Victoria district might tell you, if he felt inclined, that smoke sometimes means the Indans are doing their washing on the beach, or Mr. Jones, of Such-and-Such farm, is burning some debris. He might also tell you that smokes are reported many times during the Summer and that each one has to be treated as a forest fire until the cause of the smoke is ascertained. If a ranger had to run down every smoke personally it would keep him working twenty-four hours a day and then some, so a system has been established for locating and classifying fires and thereby, as the ancient authors used to say, hangs the tale.

Perhaps when you have been driving along in your car you have noticed a little white and green shack perched on some lofty peak; perhaps you have even paused to speculate on what manner of man would build his home on such an inaccessible spot. It is a hundred to one the little shack you saw was a lookout station, the eyes of the Forest Service. The inhabitant of this strange domicile is a patient man who spends his days peering at the surrounding country through binoculars, watching for the little whisps of smoke to appear. These men are chosen for their keenness of sight, their ability to accurately locate fires on maps and their physical fitness. The latter is very important because a lookout is usually placed at a point which can be reached only after a strenuous climb.

The lookout stations serve a dual purpose; they sight fires and they give accurate bearings on fires which have already been sighted from other points. If two lookout stations can see a fire a cross bearing is obtainable and the fire may be accurately plotted to ascertain the shortest and fastest route to it. This year the lookouts will be furnished with new equipment, two way radios.

Rapid Communication

THE new radios were introduced into the Forest Service last year to try and fill a long felt want, rapid communication. Telephones had served in the past and were still doing excellent service, but they lacked flexibility and they were not portable. Radios proved to be the solution, for, while they are not as dependable as the telephone, they can be easily transported to the site of a fire and so the ranger is furnished with a regular report of progress. They can be carried along when a party goes in to investigate a fire and used to requisition men and supplies from the base, eliminating the necessity of sending someone back with word. They have proved to be worth their weight in gold although the men who have to pack them to and from fires sometimes express the wish that they didn't weigh so much.

Working in close contact with the lookout is the assistant ranger, who is under the supervision of the ranger for that district. A ranger may have several assistant rangers; Victoria district has three, but some have more and some have less, depending on the area covered and the extent of the hazard. The assistant ranger is responsible for all fires in his district; he hires men, issues the fire fighting equipment and sees that the lookout is functioning in a proper manner. He also investigates the reported fires in his district. He issues burning permits and is expected to know at a moment's notice the exact location of any burning being done in the area for which he is responsible. Thus, when a fire is reported, he is able to glance at his map and see whether the smoke is from a fire burning under permit. If he finds the location reported is in the immediate vicinity of a permit fire he feels a sense of relief, but he still doesn't take anything for granted, he communicates with the party doing the burning and makes sure there is no other fire in that area.

1. Pumping water on a forest fire.
2. Mouse Mountain Forest Lookout, near Quesnel.
3. Fort Neville fire of 1925, where Forest Ranger Oliver Clark lost his life when trapped by fire.
4. Launch Lillian D. of the forestry service, used on coastal work.
5. Lookout tower near Prince George.
6. Lookout station at Mount Benson, near Nanaimo.
7. Launch Oliver Clark, named in memory of a ranger who gave his life in the line of duty.
8. Forest fire near Stillwater, south of Powell River.
9. Portable radio telephone set connecting the ranger headquarters with a lookout.
10. Experimental portable radio sending and receiving set, used extensively in the interior of the Province last year.

Give Valuable Service

ANOTHER vital link in the chain is the honorary fire warden. He is not a paid member of the Forest Branch, but is a reliable citizen who volunteers for service. Usually the honorary fire warden is familiar with fire fighting and capable of taking initial action in event of a fire occurring, but his main purpose is to report fires without delay to the ranger or assistant ranger. If the fire is bad he is instructed as to what action to take. In past years these men have rendered a very valuable service to the Province and many times they have been responsible for getting what might have been a bad fire quickly under control.

The ordinary citizen, too, plays his, or her, part in helping to prevent and fight forest fires. It is not unusual for a case where a private citizen has put out a fire, to come to the notice of forest officers. The citizen is generally found willing to place himself, or any equipment he may have, at the disposal of the Forest Service. Many times in the past it has been necessary to call on the residents of a district to help fight a fire and almost without exception they have turned out with a will, anxious and ready to do everything in their power to be of assistance.

Briefly, when a fire is reported this is what happens. The recipient of the report ascertains as nearly as possible the location of the smoke from the person making the report. Next he telephones the lookout, and if the smoke is visible from the lookout, he gets a compass bearing. With this information at hand he is able to plot the exact location of the smoke on a map which enables him to chart the best route to the fire. At times a fire is reported from a district which has an honorary fire warden; if such is the case, he gets in touch with the warden and has him go to the site of the fire and take initial action, or report back, whichever he sees fit. If the warden reports a large fire in a bad locality, crews are organized and dispatched to the fire at once, the ranger is notified (in case the assistant ranger took the original report) and additional men and supplies are requisitioned. Usually all of this takes a very short time and the fire fighters are on their way within half an hour of the report having been received. Sometimes two separate units take action on the same fire. It is better, officers of the branch reason, to overlap on a few fires than to miss one altogether.

Everything, Inc.

By Robert Newman

WEAVER Allen shifted uneasily in his chair. Somehow he felt the old thundercloud meant it this time.

"Remember!" Boone was storming. "Six o'clock tonight! If you don't have the money for me by then, out you go!" He turned and glowered at the blond young man who stood near the front of the shop. "And the same thing goes for you, Mr. Carpenter! I used to consider this block of property the most valuable I owned because of these shops. Then you two moved in, and now . . ." He laughed bitterly. "The Chinese laundryman next door may not lend as much tone to the place, but at least he pays the rent."

Weaver Allen looked past Boone's shoulder at Carpenter and lifted an inquiring eyebrow. Carpenter nodded, and then Weaver Allen played their ace. He opened a drawer of his desk and took out a box of cigars.

"Have a cigar, Mr. Boone," he said. "And let's talk this thing over like reasonable business men."

"I see!" spluttered Mr. Boone. "You haven't money for rent, but you have for cigars!" He started for the door. "Six o'clock!" he repeated in ominous accents, his eyes fixed on the cigars. "And it's because of tenants like you that I got nicotine poisoning and can't smoke any more!" Then the door shut with a bang.

Weaver Allen tried to avoid the reproach in Carpenter's eyes. "How would I know?" he said defensively. "It always worked before." Then his eyes narrowed. "It's that Chinese laundryman's fault. He's been scabbing on us. He pays his rent."

Carpenter's response was damning. "Your trouble is that your sign doesn't make any more sense from outside than it does from in here." And he gestured towards the reversed letters, .cnI ,gnihtyrevE.

Weaver Allen watched him leave; then his eyes returned to the black-backed letters .cnI ,gnihtyrevE. Was it possible that Carpenter was right? Suddenly his attention focused on the T. There were two eyes immediately above it. They were nice blue eyes. As he watched, the blue eyes traveled back and forth over the letters of the sign again and again, but they still looked blank and puzzled.

The door opened. A young lady said: "Will you tell me just what kind of a racket is Everything, Inc.?"

Weaver Allen frowned slightly. "Racket? It's not a racket; it's an enterprise. A specialized form of service that civilized man did not realize he needed until Weaver Allen came upon the scene."

"You, I take it," she said, "being Weaver Allen."

Weaver Allen looked slightly surprised. "Well," he said. "You certainly amaze me. Women and children, according to Jaensch, are usually of the disintegrative type. Intuitive. Inductive reasoning, you know. That, however, was sheer deduction. You'll go far."

She looked at him very calmly. "You're nuts," she said. "Absolutely."

"Absolutely." He nodded.

"You seem quite pleased about it."

"NO," he corrected. "Not pleased about it, but resigned to it. For the past six months I've been told that so often that there doesn't seem to be any two ways about it. I'm nuts. Now may I ask whether you are here for business or any other kindred purpose?"

"Business," she said, "but not with you."

"You are making a big mistake," he said. "There's not a nicer firm in all New York to do business with than Everything, Inc."

The young lady looked around the rather barren shop. It contained, in all, two chairs. Weaver Allen was sitting on one of them. She sat in the other.

"All right," she said. "I'm only human. My name's Ariadne Addison. How do you do? Now what's this all about?"

Weaver Allen rose to his feet. "Miss Addison." He bowed gravely to her, then sat again. "I am the Prop, if you will forgive the pun, of Everything, Inc."

"And what," she asked politely, "does Everything, Inc. consist of—outside of everything?"

"It consists," said Weaver Allen, "of this," he tapped his head, "and that." He pointed to the steel filing cases.

"Look," he said. "I'll give you the whole story. I got out of college in '31. I graduated, in the words of the dean, not 'cum laude,' but 'mirabile dictu.' He didn't think me stupid, mind you; it was just that he didn't see any way for me to make use of my peculiar mental gifts. He told me I have the most complete stock of useless information he had ever come across.

"So few people are really interested in information. Well, after leaving college I ran a book store and an elevator. I was secretary to a literary agent in New York and courier for an oil man, his wife and three Pekingese in France. I was lots of other things, too, but they were probably unpleasant, as I've forgotten what they were. You know what Freud says . . ."

"I don't know what Freud says," said Ariadne; "and I don't care. Go on."

Weaver Allen looked hurt. "All right" he said. "You're missing a liberal education. Well, here I was back in New York with very little money and no job. Then it came to me." His eyes glowed. "Everything, Inc.! It would do for me what your namesake Ariadne's silk thread did for Theseus. It would lead me out of our present economic labyrinth."

"Listen," said Ariadne. "I've been listening to you talk for five minutes, and if someone else walked in here now and asked me what this is all about, the only fact I could give them would be that this was Everything, Inc. and that you are nuts."

"What kind of a racket is Everything, Inc?" Weaver Allen frowned slightly. "Racket? It's not a racket; it's an enterprise."

Weaver Allen looked surprised. "I know New York very well. I use all the odd bits of information that I've got here . . ." He tapped his head. "I use all this information in my service. I guarantee to get you anything you want. Anything, no matter how unusual or outlandish. Look, would you like to know where you can get poppy, coriander or sunflower seeds, palm hearts or passion flowers for salads, boars' heads or herrings in white wine, whelks, pickled grigs . . ."

"Good-bye," said Ariadne. She rose.

"Just a second," said Weaver Allen. "You haven't told me what you came in here for."

"It's too simple," said Ariadne. "I just wanted some information."

Weaver Allen's face lit up. "But I've just been telling you . . ."

"YOU told me plenty!" sair Ariadne. "What I wanted to know is too easy. A child could tell me without straining its intelligence, but I doubt if you could. There used to be a jewelry shop here before it became Everything, Inc. All I want to know is where that shop moved to."

"I can find out," said Weaver Allen. "I can find out anything. But I want to know why you want the jeweler, because anything he can get you, I can get you."

Ariadne sighed and sat down again. "I'll try your stunt. I'll give you background. I live with a girl named Lara. She says she is half Dutch and half Javanese. She is a dancer. She has a pet boa constrictor named Vasuki. He is very young yet and only eight feet long. He eats lots of mice, and mice are expensive. It was fairly easy before, but I lost my job last week, and now we have no money left." She slipped a ring off her finger. "Do you see this ring? It is gold and chrysoprase. Some time ago the man who had this shop offered me fifty dollars for it. I need fifty dollars. I would like to find the man so that I could sell him the ring."

Weaver Allen examined it carefully. "How do you know it's chrysoprase?"

"What else could it be?"

Weaver Allen closed his eyes. "Chrysoprase," he said, "is a chalcedony. It gets its name from the Greek 'chrysos,' meaning 'gold,' and 'prason' . . ."

"Thank you so much," said Ariadne. She reached for the ring. "I doubt very much whether I'll ever see you again. I might say I'm certain I never will if I can help it, but it's been very interesting."

"You'll see me again when you come in for the money."

"What money?" she asked.

"Why, the money for the ring. I'll take care of it for you."

Ariadne tried twice to speak, then she turned and left the shop. Weaver Allen gazed approvingly after the white linen jacket she was wearing until it disappeared from sight. He closed his eyes. "'Chrysos,' gold and 'prason,' leek. A greenish-gold stone . . ."

The door of the shop opened and closed. "Kornstein is the name," said a deep, rumbling voice. "Hello."

Weaver Allen studied the florid face before him. It surrounded a long cigar, and it was topped by an expensive Panama.

"How do you do, Mr. Kornstein," he said. "I'm Weaver Allen. Won't you sit down?"

"First," said Mr. Kornstein, "I want to know is this Greenwich Village?"

"The very heart of it."

"Good! Now what's this Everything, Inc. you've got here?"

Weaver Allen thought of Miss Addison. Succinctness had seemed very important to her. "I guarantee to get you anything under the sun you want," he said.

Mr. Kornstein nodded. "Fine!" he said. "Always I got luck. A whole day I might have spent and not found a place like this. I'll give Miss Schultz a raise. She's a smart girl."

WEAVER Allen felt he was beginning to understand the slight irritation Miss Addison had shown towards his occasional discussive ramblings. "Just what," he asked, "has Miss Schultz to do with it?"

Mr. Kornstein looked surprised. "Do with it? Everything! She told me there was unusual shops down in Greenwich Village. Look, I'm a busy man and a man of few words. You don't know my name, Kornstein? Good! I produce revues. This year I produce 'Delights of 1937.' Last year it was 'Delights of 1936.'

"So Wednesday is my wife's birthday. Never before did I have a problem. I call up Cartier's. 'Send up a diamond bracelet,' I say, 'for two thousand dollars,' and it's finished. But this time . . ." He shook his head sadly. "Where she gets her ideas I don't know. 'Morris,' she says to me, 'you don't really love me.'"

He looked at Weaver Allen. "'So what's the matter, Carrie?' I ask her. 'Why I don't love you?'

"'Every year, Morris,' she says, 'it's diamonds. For my birthday, for Christmas, for my anniversary, it's diamonds. Money ain't everything,' she says to me. 'It's the thought behind it. This year for my birthday you should spend only fifty dollars, but it should be unusual, different. You should give some thought.'"

He glared at Weaver Allen. "I should give thought!" he said. "Me, who I'm going crazy thinking what would be a good finale for my second act. . . . So all right! This morning in the office I said to Miss Schultz, 'Miss Schultz,' I said, 'where can you buy something very unusual?' Quick like a flash she tells me. 'In Greenwich Village,' she says. So here I am."

Mr Kornstein leaned back in his chair, and Weaver Allen felt he understood Miss Addison perfectly now. "And where exactly do I come in?"

"You got here Everything, Inc., ain't you? So I'm giving you card blanche. Get me something unusual for my Carrie, price no object."

He rose to his feet, pulled three cigars out of his pocket, and thrust them towards Weaver Allen. "Have a cigar. Five dollars a box they cost me."

"No, thanks," said Weaver Allen. "I don't smoke cigars."

Mr. Kornstein leaned forward. "I ain't supposed to smoke cigars, neither," he said, "but down on Pearl Street a man makes these special for me. Denicotinized they are. No nicotine in 'em, so it's all right." He thrust the cigars in the breast pocket of Weaver Allen's suit.

"Wait!" he said. "Another idea I got. Can you get books?"

"Certainly; what kind?"

"What kind?" repeated Kornstein. "That's your job. Look, I got a library home, about forty shelves it has, empty. Each shelf five feet long. Carrie, she always says to me, 'Morris, you ought to buy books. Empty, those shelves don't look good.' So get me books, enough to fill the shelves. Carrie, she'll be pleased."

He waddled towards the door. "Am I lucky I should find an Everything, Inc., with such an intelligent feller. Tomorrow I'll be back. Good-bye."

THE door shut, and Weaver Allen sat quietly for about five minutes, his eyes closed; then he sighed, picked up his hat, and left the shop.

He walked down Fourth Street past the Chinese laundry and stopped in front of Bard's Bookshop. He looked in through the window and saw Carpenter. He went in. His eyes were half closed in concentration. "Forty shelves times five is two hundred feet of books. I want good books. I'll check them myself."

Carpenter was scribbling on a piece of paper. "Two hundred feet. We'll say sixteen hundred books." He looked up. "Two hundred and forty bucks. That's cheap, but I'll still be making a little something. I'll find out when I can deliver them."

He went inside to telephone. A book bound in white parchment was lying on the desk. It's title was "Jade: A Study."

Weaver Allen ruffled through the pages, reading snatches of the text. ". . . name jade originated in a typographical error . . . called piedra de lijada, or 'stone of the loins,' by the Spanish . . . French typesetters Gallicized it . . . lijada to 'le jade' . . . jadeite and nephrite . . ."

There were several beautiful color plates on the book, and he examined them raptly, then suddenly he stopped turning the pages and stared. He read the descriptive matter under the illustration, several times, then, with a faraway look in his eyes, he closed the book. Carpenter came out of the back room.

"I'll have the books for you tomorrow."

"You get two hundred and forty dollars."

"I'll take ten per cent, or twenty-four dollars, for my own efforts. Not a bad day's work and," he looked at the book titled "Jade: A Study," "I have an idea my day isn't finished yet."

"No?" asked Carpenter. "Where are you off to?"

"Cartier's."

He stepped quickly out of the door and pulled it shut after him. As he turned he bumped into a short, peppery-looking man.

Carpenter gasped. It was Boone, their landlord. Automatically his eyes went to the clock on the wall. It was not six yet, but even so he would not get the money for the books for a day or so. He looked out the window again and then he blinked. Weaver Allen was offering Boone a cigar!

Carpenter restrained an impulse to close his eyes. Then he saw Boone take the cigar, sniff it and light it. He puffed out a cloud of blue smoke and a beatific smile spread over his face. Weaver Allen took two more cigars from his pocket and gave them to Boone, who took out his wallet, handed him several bills, patted him affectionately on the shoulder, and walked away beaming . . .

It was a little after ten the following morning when Weaver Allen saw the long black car stop in front of the shop and Mr. Morris Kornstein emerge. He went to the door to greet him.

"Good morning, Mr. Kornstein," he said.

"Hello, my boy," said Mr. Kornstein. "So you got?"

Weaver Allen led the way inside, and when Mr. Kornstein was seated, opened a drawer of his desk, took out a small velvet-covered box, and handed it to Mr. Kornstein.

MR. Kornstein pressed the catch and looked at the ring inside. "Very nice," he said. "What is it?"

"That is a piece of Fei Ts'ui jade. It is sometimes called Imperial jade, but Fei Ts'ui is its correct name. It is very rare and unusual. Here is a letter from Cartier's appraising department stating that they have not had a piece as fine as that in their store for many years. They value the stone alone at three thousand dollars. The setting, as you see, is gold." He handed the letter to Mr. Kornstein. "Here is a photograph of the ring signed by the appraiser to prove that everything is in order and aboveboard."

"Mr. Allen," said Mr. Kornstein, "you're wonderful! Me, I didn't even know you could spend that much money on jewelry, outside, of course, diamonds. My Carrie, she'll be crazy about it." He took out a cheque book and a fountain pen. "How much?" he asked.

Weaver Allen looked at him quietly.

"Mr. Kornstein," he said, "I wouldn't think of charging you a cent more than the appraised value of the ring. Not even my customary ten per cent for service. But just a second before you make out a cheque; there are the books you wanted."

"Say, I forgot about them! It's a good thing you remembered."

"Remembered? Mr. Kornstein, I even remember your telling me that you had your denicotinized cigars made up specially for you by a tobacconist on Pearl Street at five dollars a box!"

"Dot's right. Sebastiano, 67 Pearl Street."

"Exactly," said Weaver Allen, writing the address on a pad. "And I also remember your telling me that you are having difficulties getting a finale for the second act of 'Delights of 1937.'"

Mr. Kornstein tapped his brow. "Like iron he has a head! He don't forget nothing! Maybe you'd like to work for me?"

"Mr. Kornstein, I am working for you! When I get a commission from a client, my work doesn't stop with the execution of that commission. No! My brain works ceaselessly to find other ways to be of service. Mr. Kornstein, your troubles are over. I have the finale for your second act!"

When Weaver Allen returned from the Baird's Bookshop, having delivered Kornstein's cheque to Carpenter, he had a slim book with him. The red letters on the jacket read "'The Rock,' by T. S. Eliot." He sat down and started to read. Near the bottom of the first page he stopped. The door opened and he looked up into the face of Ariadne Addison.

"Come in," he said. "Sit down and listen." He read aloud from the book.

"Where is the Life we have lost in living?
Where is the wisdom we have lost in knowledge?
Where is the knowledge we have lost in information?
The cycles of Heaven in twenty centuries
Bring us farther from God and nearer to the dust."

He shut the book and studied Ariadne's face for a moment. "Wisdom, I suppose is beyond, the hopes of most of us; but knowledge . . ." He traced the curves of Ariadne's red lips. "I know very little. I know the marriage rites of the Trobriand Islanders and the latest theory of sex attraction as an electric current, but I do not know a damn thing about love."

Ariadne's voice was surprisingly soft. "Don't you?" she asked.

"No," said Weaver Allen. "Do you think it's too late to learn?"

ARIADNE pursed her lips reflectively. "Hmm," she said. "I don't know. Of course, you'd have to learn from a woman. A woman who would understand your scientific and empirical approach. A woman who would realize she was only a means to an end. A method, let us say, of turning information into knowledge."

Weaver Allen's eyes were cold. "All right," he said. "I can take it. I should have known better. Sit down and let's talk business."

Ariadne sat down. "Did you get the jeweler's address for me?" she asked.

"No," said Weaver Allen. He reached into his desk. "You wanted fifty dollars for the ring. I've got that for you in cash." He handed her five ten-dollar bills. "That'll do you until you get the cheque cashed," and he handed her the cheque. She looked at it and then at him.

"Two thousand, nine hundred and fifty dollars!" she said. "What——"

"I didn't think it was Chrysoprase," he answered. "It was jade: Fei Ts'ui jade. I had it appraised at Cartier's. When you cash your cheque, you can send me my commission. Ten per cent, or three hundred dollars."

"I——" she began.

"Go back to your room," he interrupted, "and pick up your roommate Lara and her serpentine pal Vasuki. Put them in a cab and take them up to see Mr Morris Kornstein, the producer of 'Delights of 1937.'"

"Would it be too much trouble for you to give me just a word of explanation?" asked Ariadne quietly.

"No trouble at all," said Weaver Allen. "I sold Kornstein your ring. He was stuck for a finale for his second act. When I told him I could get him a Javanese princess doing the Sacred Serpent Dance with an eight-foot python, he practically fell on my neck. She'll probably start at five hundred a week. Now get moving; Kornstein's waiting for you and I have work to do."

He opened a drawer of his desk and started busily running through some papers. He looked up with a frown when her hand touched his shoulder, but when he felt the warm pressure on his lips, he gasped. That is, he gasped as soon as he could.

Ariadne stepped back. "You don't fool me," she said, "worth a cent!"

The door of the shop opened and shut, and Weaver Allen took a handkerchief from his pocket and wiped the lipstick from his lips.

* * * * *

Four-thirty. The door of the shop opened and Ariadne Addison entered. She sat down, opened her handbag, and took out a cheque. "Three hundred dollars, ten per cent of three thousand." She laid the cheque on his desk and took another one out of her bag. "Fifty dollars, ten per cent of five hundred."

Weaver Allen looked at the cheque and then at her.

"What's this one for?" he asked.

"Agent's commission, ten per cent. For placing Lara in 'Delights of 1937.' You can expect a cheque a week for the next six months. Kornstein gave her a six-months' contract." She shook her head severely. "There's an awful lot of bets you overlooked. Got a pencil?"

He nodded mutely.

"Write!" she said. She took a typewritten list from her handbag and started to read. "One eight-foot-high statue of Kali with two heads and six arms. Twenty-five Zulu shields and assegais. One elephant complete with howdah, mahout, and ankh. One white camel with . . ."

WEAVER Allen leaned back in his chair. "Wha-what?" he asked.

Ariadne passed him the typewritten sheet. There was a small slip of paper clipped to its top. It said, "All properties for 'Delights of 1937' to be furnished by Everything, Inc. Morris Kornstein."

Weaver Allen rose to his feet. He was frowning. "Why did you do it?"

"Do what?"

"That!" He pointed to the typewritten sheet.

"Oh, that!" said Ariadne. "I don't know. It just came to me. It was so easy, it's really not worth talking about. Kornstein likes you. I don't know why."

"Don't you?" asked Weaver Allen.

"No," said Ariadne.

"Don't you?" he asked again.

"Don't I what?" Her voice was rather muffled.

"Know why Kornstein likes me?"

"No," said Ariadne, "but I know why I do."

He released her only when the door opened, and they looked up to see Boone standing there.

"I'm sorry," he apologized, rather flustered. "I didn't mean to interrupt, but I was passing by and . . ."

"Your denicotinized cigars," said Weaver Allen. "Of course." He handed Boone the two boxes from his desk. "I will give you the money for the rent just as soon as I get these cheques cashed."

"Oh, there's no hurry, Mr. Allen. It is a pleasure to have you as a tenant."

Weaver Allen bowed. "Thank you. And meet Miss Addison. She'll probably be around here a lot from now on."

"Really?" asked Ariadne.

"Really!" Weaver Allen pointed to Kornstein's typewritten list on his desk. "You didn't expect me to handle that all alone, did you?"

"Frankly, no," Ariadne looked at him calculatingly. "What will I be, your secretary or your partner?"

"I will be your partner, your boss, and probably your husband," said Weaver Allen. "Everything, Inc. That's me!"

Cottage Now Memorial To Lawrence of Arabia

By JOAN LITTLEFIELD

CLOUD'S Hill, Moreton Heath, Dorset, the cottage in which Lawrence of Arabia lived and worked, has been given to the National Trust by A. W. Lawrence, as part of the memorial to his brother.

The cottage, which was purchased by Lawrence while serving with the Royal Air Force at Bovington Camp, a mile and a half away, lies in isolated heath country in a setting of rhododendron bushes. Most of the decorations and fittings were created by Lawrence with the help of friends.

The three rooms of the cottage have a minimum of furniture—a couch to lie on, a table to work at, an armchair to rest in—and bear witness to the simple life their owner led among his books. The tiny guest room, built like a ship's cabin, has bright stainless steel fenders and candlesticks and shining aluminum wallpaper.

Pat Knowles, Lawrence's friend and secretary and now the guardian of the cottage, said he and Lawrence each had sleeping bags. Lawrence's was embroidered with the word "Meum" (Mine) and Knowles' with the word "Tuum" (Thine). Sometimes, if there was a fire, they slept in the back room, sometimes in the music room, and sometimes, when the weather was warm and fine, in the garden or on the heath itself.

Unity in Choral Works

UNITY is in the air. The need of it in religious, philanthropic and social work is becoming more apparent daily.

Adjudicators at the Musical Festivals in Victoria have repeatedly urged our singers and instrumentalists to unite for the better performance of music. It must be obvious to all lovers of music that in a small place like Victoria, unity is imperative if we are to do full justice and honor to the great choral works of the masters of all the ages.

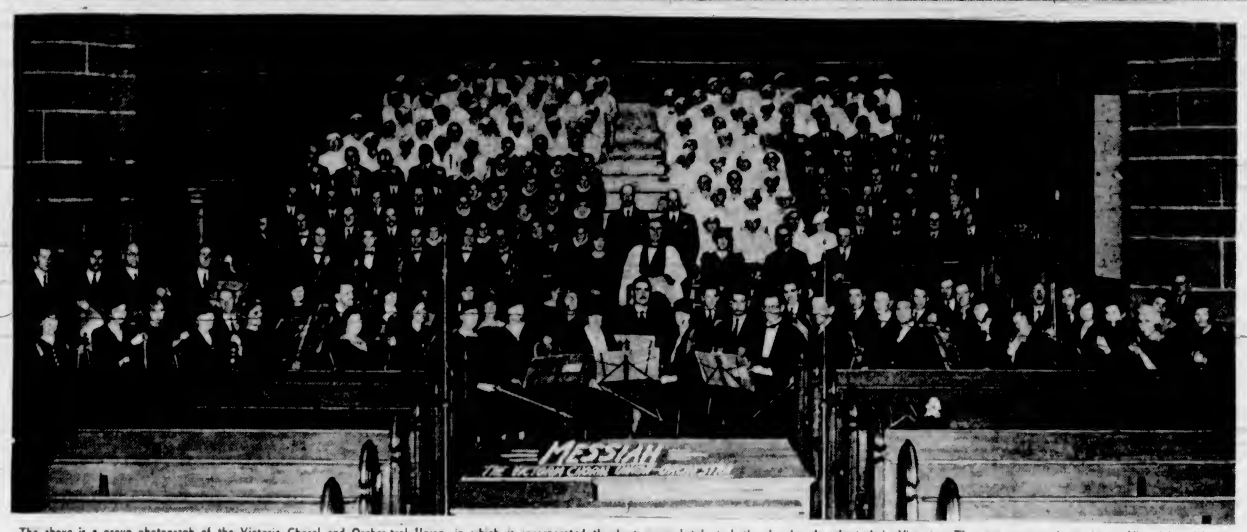

Nothing, however, was done along these lines until 1934, when the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union launched a movement to give effect to the authoritative advice of the adjudicators. The movement attracted the attention of Mr. Bernard K. Sandwell, editor of Toronto Saturday Night, and noted musical critic, who penned the following editorial:

"There is a lesson for many other Canadian communities in the story of the Victoria Choral Union, in the capital city of British Columbia, which has now for two seasons presented performances of choral works by a 200-voice choir supported by a semi-professional orchestra. The lesson relates mainly to the willingness of singers belonging to many different churches and clubs and societies to forget their special interests and local rivalry for the purpose of uniting together in an undertaking which can only be successful when practically all the musical energies of the community are combined together. Twenty-four musical organizations, as well as a number of unattached singers, were engaged in the last performance of the Choral Union. . . . Mr. Stanley F. Bulley is an accomplished musician, well acquainted with the results of modern scholarship upon the conducting of the classics. But a fine community spirit among both musicians and public is undoubtedly the chief element in the success of the Choral Union."

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union is, as its name implies, a strictly civic or community effort. Most of the church choirs are already represented in the chorus, and the orchestra is a happy combination of amateur and professional musicians.

Professional instrumentalists are so interested in its success that they have, in several instances, returned their fee cheques in order to assist the cause.

The authorities of Christ Church Cathedral give the free use of the Cathedral in order to assist the effort. Without this assistance a community effort such as ours would be impossible, as there is no other building in the city capable of accommodating a large chorus and orchestra, together with an audience sufficiently large to defray the heavy expenses. The Royal Victoria Theatre or the Armories might be used, but the cost of rental of the former, and the provision of seating in the latter, would be prohibitive.

The above is a group photograph of the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union, in which is incorporated the best musical talent, both choral and orchestral, in Victoria. The picture was taken prior to Victoria's celebration of the Coronation of King George VI, in which the Union took part in a three-day festival of all British music.

Children's Participation

A UNIQUE and valuable feature of the movement is the invitation extended to the children of the public schools in the city, Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich, and children in the orphanage, to attend the final rehearsals. These rehearsals are really finished performances, complete with soloists, chorus and orchestra. As many as 1,000 children have attended and listened with rapt attention. The conductor, Mr. Stanley Bulley, explains to the children the meaning of the work, the aim of the composer, the organization of the chorus and orchestra and the use and characteristics of the various instruments. The children look forward to the rehearsals with keen anticipation.

At the Coronation Festival last year the children, who had been learning Elgar's "Land of Hope and Glory" and Parry's "Jerusalem" during the Winter, sang these numbers with the chorus and orchestra. The effect of the fresh, sweet voices joining in these noble songs was thrilling to all who were present.

This feature of the movement is a valuable contribution to the cultural life of the city, for the opportunity of hearing Handel's immortal "Messiah" and the other great works produced under such inspiring conditions cannot fail to make a good and lasting impression on the young mind.

Public Interest

THE great interest shown by the public in the movement is fully demonstrated by the fact that in addition to the paid admissions to the concerts by ever-increasing numbers, more than $2,500 has been donated, in sums varying from $10 to $250, towards the expenses. More is forthcoming, providing that genuine progress towards unity is shown.

The clergy of all denominations have rendered valuable assistance by mentioning the work of the union in sermons, addresses and weekly church circulars.

The Daily Colonist and Daily Times have also been most generous in giving publicity to the movement.

Financial

THE members of the chorus and orchestra are in the unique position of having no financial burden to carry. They provide their own music, but the financing of the concerts is in the hands of an influential recitals committee of business and professional men. During the past four years this committee has disbursed about $5,000, mostly in work and wages. The concerts resulted in a deficit of $895. The recitals committee, with the assistance of the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union, not only raised funds to meet the deficits, but have also raised a substantial reserve fund. There are no paid officials. Owing to voluntary services, the whole cost of administration and office expenses amounts to less than $10 for each concert.

Past Performances

FOUR annual performances of Handel's "Messiah" have been given. Brahms' "Requiem" was performed in April, 1936, in memory of King George V. A three-day Festival of British Music was given in May, 1937, to celebrate the Coronation of Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. One of these recitals, was, by official sanction, raised to the dignity of a state performance, and was graciously acknowledged by His Majesty the King. Invitations to this performance were extended to representatives of the Government, the Army, the Navy, the Judiciary, the Consular Services, the City Council of Victoria, the Councils of Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich, the service organizations, churches of every denomination, choirs, musical clubs and other organizations throughout the city. Probably no other musical performance has ever been given before an audience so thoroughly representative of the whole community.

A performance of Bach's "Passion of Our Lord" was given in April, 1938.

Plans for 1938-39

DECEMBER 14, 1938, "Messiah," fifth annual performance. December 14 is the anniversary of the birthday of King George VI, and His Majesty has graciously sanctioned this performance being held in celebration of his birthday. The performance will be opened with Sir Edward Elgar's setting of the National Anthem, which was composed in honor of the Coronation of King Edward VII.

In April or May, 1939, the following works will be presented: "Requiem Mass" (Mozart), "Dona Nobis Pacem" (R. Vaughan Williams), "Blest Pair of Sirens" (C. Hubert Perry) and a work for the orchestra yet to be selected.

Chorus and Orchestra

THE chorus platform has a seating capacity of 200, and the space available for the orchestra can accommodate about seventy players. The present members have assessed themselves $2 annually to cover the cost of music and incidental expenses in connection with the rehearsals. It is not, however, wished to embarrass those who desire to help, but whose means do not permit of paying this fee. Such are exempted on request, which is treated as strictly confidential. The chief consideration is regular attendance at rehearsals and a reasonable amount of home study.

Members of the chorus will be encouraged to understudy the soloists, take their places at rehearsals and at performances should the necessity arise. Many of the world's greatest soloists have gained the first step in their career by such means as these.

Soloists

THE committee endeavors to secure at least one soloist of outstanding ability from outside Victoria for each concert, the object being to give local singers and the public an opportunity of hearing different interpretations and new ideas.

The Conductor

THE conductor is elected by the members at the annual meeting. Mr. Stanley F. Bulley, A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., the present conductor, is a musician of exceptional ability and zeal. He came to Victoria with recommendations from musicians of very high standing, namely: Sir Hugh Allen, principal of the Royal College of Music; Dr. Sidney Nicholson, principal of the English School of Church Music; Dr. Bullock, organist, Westminster Abbey; Dr. William Harris, organist, St. George's Chapel, Windsor; Dr. Henry Ley, Eton College; Gustav Holst, composer. That Mr. Bulley has fully justified the recommendations of these men is acknowledged by all who have sung or played under his leadership. At Mr. Bulley's rehearsals, valuable instruction in voice production, musical theory, interpretation, etc., is given without stint.

Conclusion

IF so many people in every walk of life approve of the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union and are ready to help it with advice and financial assistance, surely this is sufficient proof of its soundness and value to Victoria and the outlying districts. As has been shown, it has been most favorably commented on in Toronto, and there is no doubt that if the lovers of music in Victoria really get behind the movement and take a pride in it, the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union should be known all over Canada, and other cities might follow Victoria's example, thereby raising the standard of singing throughout the Dominion.

To Singers and Players

IF you are interested in the movement and wish to help it, send your name, stating the choir or club (if any) to which you belong, to the honorary secretary, Mr. A. S. Miller, 1309 Blanshard Street. Choirs and clubs represented in the union will, together with the names of their conductors or leaders, be printed in the programmes.

To the General Public

IF you wish to co-operate in this movement, there are a number of ways of doing so, among which may be mentioned:

(a.) Advise singers or players to join the chorus or orchestra.

(b.) Attend the concerts.

(c.) Help to arouse public interest by mentioning the concerts in the course of conversation.

(d.) Subscribe to the recitals reserve fund. This is administered by the committee of business and professional men referred to in a previous paragraph.

Acknowledgment

THE committee wish to publicly acknowledge the generous financial support accorded the movement.

The officers of the Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union follow: Colville of Culross, president; W. H. Wilson, vice-president; A. S. Miller, honorary secretary, chorus and orchestra; George Phillips, honorary secretary, recitals committee, and concert manager.

Fun With Figures

GETTING A RISE OUT OF ARITHMETIC

By STEPHEN LEACOCK

YOU would hardly expect to get much fun out of arithmetic, at least not out of present arithmetic books. There is no laughter at the page, and only tears will fall on it.

But that only means that we have long since squeezed it dry of the human element, the heart-to-heart stuff that used to be in it. Turn back to the history of the thing and there is lots of amusement to be found.

Oddly enough, our arithmetic is one of the things that we did not get from the everlasting Greeks and Romans. They hardly had any. The Romans had no notation for it. They could count, but not far; and they had to stick to whole numbers and go one at a time. Multiplication was beyond them. Imagine a Roman with a multiplication sum like this.

——

Hindus and Their Problems

SO our arithmetic came to us from the East and started with the Hindus. Apparently the Hindu had a philosophical mind and so he could think of Nothing, and use a sign for it, or at least give it a "place," and that started all our wonderful method of decimal counting. But the Hindu, like all Orientals, was nothing if not dreamy or romantic. The Hindu arithmetic man couldn't think of numbers without putting them into some kind of a personal setting. So when he stated a problem he addressed it as a request to some individual in particular, as, for example, to a cow—always a sacred creature to the Hindus and the very embodiment of ruminating thought. Thus:

"O cow, standing beside the Ganges, tell me, if thou knowest it, how much is two and then two more?" It appears also that the Hindu, as a sentimental being, was unable to keep out the idea of "love" or what they call in the movies the "sex motive." He addressed his arithmetic to his sweetheart and presents her with a problem as a sort of love-token.

"Here I bring to you, O Fair One, an isosceles triangle. Tell me, if you love me, whether the angles at the base of it be not equal."

But our arithmetic did not come direct from India. It was imported via Arabia and from the Arabian books translated into medieval Latin. This pilgrimage touched it with the colors of mystery that hang around the Kingdom of Haroun al Raschid and the mosques of Mecca and the Grand Cairo. It becomes a first cousin of alchemy and in a way a branch of magic. In fact, it was so written up as to give it a queer outlandish touch of mystery and the quaint conceit of a mystic craft.

The Numbers Game

LISTEN to this, from a medieval writer of the thirteen hundreds. Thomas of Newmarket, readapting into English a Latin script of Alexander of the City of God. He calls it the Craft of Nombrunge, by which he means numbering, and from start to finish he is mighty proud of it. Helping him out a little, but not too much, with his spelling and punctuation we find that he tells us that:

"This book is called the book of Algorym, or Augrym after lewder folk." (Just why "augrym" sounded a bit lewd in A.D. 1220 we don't know, we miss the joke).

"And this book treateth the craft of nombrynge which is also called Algorum." (He said that before, but time didn't matter in a medieval monastery.) He goes on:

"There was a King of Inde, the which Alger and he made this craft." (One of the Alger boys, presumably).

"And after his name he called it Algorym." (That would seem to follow, but Thomas himself is not satisfied; he gives a second explanation for good measure):

"Or else another cause is why it is called Algorym for the Latin word of hit, sic, Algorismus, comes of Algos, Greek, that is art, Latin, craft, English and rides which is number, Latin, number English, and so it is called Algorismus by additon of this syllable 'mus' and subtraction of d and e."

(Anybody who doesn't get it now is never going to get it). After this we plunge right in:

Furthermore you must understand that in this craft ben used ten figures as here been written for ensample 0 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1. This present craft is called Algorismus in the which we use ten signs of India."

(Thomas had said this before but he can't bear to let such a good thing go. But notice what he does now to brighten it up and say it over again. He puts it into dialogue):

"Quaestio. Why ten figures from India?"

"Solutio. For as I have said afore they were found first in Inde by a king of that country that was called Algor."

After which, as they say in old French poetry, who doesn't know that doesn't know anything.

Census Taking

BUT arithmetic never got really well started till it reached the age of commerce and industry, when accounting and ciphering became part of practical life. After all, in the days of Thomas of Newmarket there was nothing much to count; shepherds counted the "tale" of their sheep on a hillside once a day and large families were counted once a year. Money accounts were reckoned on a notched stick, and very few people could read or write that was about the whole of it.

But when printing came, and commerce overseas, and merchant cargoes went out in ships, then arithmetic came into its own. And in those days it still carried with it, in all its little sums and problems and calculations, something of the romance of commerce, some whiff of the salt of the sea.

Here take as our witness a book called Arithmetic, the Doctrine of Numbers brought forth in 1749 by a Mr. Solomon Lowe, "Schoolmaster at Hammersmith." Mr. Lowe proves the fact that he lives in a commercial age by writing on his title page a Quotation from Addison's Spectator which says: "Numbers are so much the measure of everything that is valuable, that is not possible to demonstrate the process of any action or the prudence of any undertaking without them." This is a long way from mystic properties of 7 as the perfect number of the Middle Ages, or the magic squares, or the cunning of the alchemist. This is straight business. Mr. Lowe soon proves it.

"A certain man," he says, "having driven his swine to the market, viz hogs, sows and pigs, received 50s for them, being paid, for every hog, 18s; for every sow, 16s; for every pig, 2s." Mr. Lowe says further—that there were as many hogs as sows and for every sow 3 pigs. He wants to know how many were there of each sort.

Most of us would fall down here not knowing the difference between a hog and a pig, a piece of information which Mr. Lowe fails to give. But at any rate this begins to sound like arithmetic. Mr. Lowe's "problems" have got the real eighteenth-century touch to them. It was the day of hard drinking and even arithmetic got saturated with liquor.

Liquor a Problem Then, Too

1. "Four men drink, at table, 16 pennyworth of wine, etc." (lucky fellows! to get it for 32 cents for the four of them).

2. "Reduce," commands Mr. Lowe in his peremptory way, "31 1-2 gallons of beer to a fraction of a barrel." That sounds as if it would take a good deal of drinking.

"I bought 40 gallons of brandy for 618s," he says and leaves us too stupified to ask what happened next. That's only 64 cents a quart.

Try this one:

"A brewer," says Mr. Lowe, "mixed 17 gallons of ale at 8d. per gallon, with 19 gallons at 10d per gallon and with 40 gallons at 6d per gallon, what," he asks, "is one gallon of this mixture worth?"

It sounds priceless.

Mr. Lowe's arithmetic recalls to us very vividly the queer state of the criminal law of two hundred years ago.

"A robbery being committed on the highway," he says, in chatting over the art of subtraction, "there was assessed on a certain hundred (that means a country district) in the county of York, the sum of £373 14s 8d, of which the four parishes paid £37 16s 4d apiece, the four hamlets £28 3s 10d; the four townships £19 19s each. What," asks Mr. Lowe, "was the deficiency?" And he tells us, for Mr. Lowe always solves his problems instantly on the same line, without any waiting, that it was £29 18s. But think of the odd system!—the hold-up had to be paid for by all the people who lived along the road.

But best of all is the breeze from the salt seas of the English coast that blows the pages of Lowe's book.

"A ship's company took a prize of £300 which was to have been divided among them according to their pay and the time they had been on board, etc., etc."

Famous People Meet A, B, C

THEN in a fatal moment Mr. Lowe got tired of inventing real characters and invented three purely imaginary people called A, B, and C.

"A, B, and C," says Lowe, "freight a ship for the Canaries." But he soon has them doing all sorts of other things. "Three gardeners (A, B, and C)" he tells us, "have bought a piece of ground." He gives their names in parenthesis. But he doesn't need to. We would have guessed it was A, B, and C. It was just like them to do it.

Before Lowe gets to the end of his book A, B, and C already show signs of chasing out all the other characters—the captains, the midshipmen and merchants, and brewers and gentlemen, and taking over the arithmetic to themselves.

This as everyone knows they presently did, and the other characters and the distinctive occupations died out.

"A, B, and C," says the nineteenth-century arithmetic, "do a certain piece of work." Nor is there any evidence that they shared prize money, or drank fractions of a barrel of beer in return for it.

Thus mathematics lost first its mysticism, then its magic, and finally its romance.

Hard and Dirty Job

FOREST fires lack the clammer and dash of city fires, when a forest fire is reported and located the assistant ranger heaves a pump, an armful of axes and some shovels into the back of his light delivery truck and away he goes, there's no glamour about fighting forest fires, it's a hard and dirty job, and he knows it. When he returns at night—perhaps one should say if he returns at night—he's tired, his feet hurt and his fervent prayer is that he be allowed to sleep, undisturbed, for a couple of hours at least. But despite all the grumbling, when you ask them why they stick to such a job you always get the same reply, "Well, someone's got to put the blooming fires out."

Private concerns have taken it upon themselves to preach the doctrine of forest fire prevention through their advertising. The newspapers have time and again donated space for forest fire prevention editorials. In fact, everyone in the Province has become forest fire prevention conscious during the past few years. The cry "Help Prevent Forest Fires" is heard everywhere, but that is not enough, we must practice what we preach and for that purpose we give you these simple rules to follow.

1. Do not throw away burning cigarettes, cigars or matches.

2. Obtain a campfire permit before starting a campfire.

3. Do not light your fire near a stump or snag.

4. Dig down to mineral soil before starting a campfire.

5. Make sure every spark of your fire is out before you leave it.

Astronomer Honored

ENGLAND'S most distinguished honor, the Order of Merit, limited by statute to twenty-four Ordinary Members, but at present consisting of only seventeen, has just been bestowed on Sir Arthur Eddington, scientist and one of the three principal English writers on Einstein and his law of relativity.

Sir Arthur, at fifty-five, is the youngest member of the order by five years. Next above him in age are John Masefield, Poet Laureate, who is sixty, and Dr. Vaughan Williams, musician, who is sixty-five. The oldest O.M. is Sir George Grierson, a great authority on Indian languages, who is eighty-seven. The average age of members is seventy-five.

Sir Arthur Eddington is a Quaker. He once remarked that "falling in love was one of the activities forbidden to that tiresome person, the consistently reasonable man." Consistent himself, he has accordingly remained a bachelor. At Cambridge he is often to be seen on a bicycle. On the golf course he has been known to illustrate astronomical theories with golf balls.

A Fine Art Vanishes

A SUBTLE art and an ancient custom, bargaining, is to disappear from the daily life of Turkey by decree. Under a new bill, bargaining in the various retail trades will be forbidden. Prices of commodities will have to be affixed in a conspicuous place, on pain of fines or imprisonment. Distrust and the fear of being cheated, will, it is felt, give way by the price system to a feeling of greater security and ultimately to better purchasing and a reduction in the cost of living.

'Twixt Hillside and Pond

A Study in Plant Association

By Robert Connell

THE gravelly plains of Langford and Colwood extend their northern edge in small lobes lying between the once wave-washed bases of the hills that formed islets and promontories in the post-glacial sea. One of these lobes is occupied at its head by Florence Lake, from which the rocky slopes of Mount Skirt's southeast shoulder rise somewhat abruptly. The little lake fills a depression at the inner margin of the lobe. A one-way road runs from the highway to the lake, winding round its swampy corner and then zigzagging up and down as well as horizontally as it passes to the further end. Just where it bends around the lower corner, a trail leaves it and strikes along the bottom of the hill eastwards to the Highland District road from Langford station. In the angle made by the trail and the by-road lies a little pond, and beyond the pond are to be seen the scattered oaks and Douglas firs and open prairie of the Langford Plains. It is a pretty picture; in the nearer foreground the herbage passes from a yellowish green to a deeper one; the water reflects the cloudless sky; over a belt of more vivid green lies a glimpse of the tawny rolling plain with its tree-thrown shadows; to the left, firs and pines climb the slopes among the outcrops of grey and splintered rock, with here and there the gleaming yellow, red and green of an arbutus.

But the pond and its surroundings do not only form a charming picture; they are of great interest to the plant-lover because here, in little space, is a variety of environment that promises at once pleasure and instruction. Plants are conditioned in their growth and spread by their own powers of adaptation to various types of environment. So if we find a species scattered over a vast area, it will be because it finds within that area places where conditions are such as to be within the range of its powers of accommodation. Thus among trees the arbutus extends from the Straits of Georgia to the southern end of the Santa Cruz mountains of California. Our large-leaved maple is found from Alaska almost to the Mexican border, while the smooth-leaved maple covers the same range as far as the northern part of California. The Garry oak, our local species, extends from the Straits of Georgia to the Santa Cruz mountains, thus having the same range as the arbutus. Our flowering dogwood and ocean-spray spiraea both grow from the southern part of this province to Central California. But everywhere they will be found occupying a similar type of soil, similar conditions of drainage, and with similar relations to light and shade. With this in mind, we enter our little corner between pond and hill.

Thickets of Rose

WE notice first that the level is broken by thickets of the pea-fruited rose, a later bloomer than the Nootka rose and with somewhat smaller flowers in clusters. This rose extends its habitat from this province all the way not only to California, but as far as Utah. There is a thicket also of hardhack or Douglas' spiraea, very handsome with its dense panicles of rosy pink flowers just beginning to come out. This spiraea is peculiar to our Northwest Pacific coast as far south as Oregon, but it seems to be very similar to the Eastern hardhack, which has medicinal reputation as an astringent. Next in conspicuousness as we look over the low flat is the sneezewort, or Helenium autumnale. It is not yet in full flower, but its tall, light green leafy stems stand up well above the lower herbage, and when we examine them we find the flowers in various stages of growth from little green pincushion-like pads to larger ones with the petals quite distinctly to be seen and even beginning to show their yellow color. The sneezeweed is a plant of low ground and ditches appearing after the water has dried up. Last year it was still in flower near the end of September. The resinous foliage suggests a dry environment, and it is in the hottest period of the Summer that it makes its appearance. It grows south to Oregon and east into Idaho. It holds its place in British gardens and will be found listed in gardening books. It is indeed a handsome plant with its large flower-heads and three-lobed ray-flowers. It derives its popular name from the fact that its leaves and flowers, when dried and powdered, produce violent sneezing, and it has in times past been used medicinally for this purpose.

The Fool's Onion

SCATTERED about and rising with slender stalks bearing clusters of white flowers we see another plant which, if we travelled to Idaho in the right season, we should find there not far from the sneezeweed and which we should meet if we went south instead of east as far away as California. This is the fool's onion, or wild hyacinth, Brodiaea lactea, also known as Hookera hyacinthina, or as Hesperocordum hyacinthinum, literally the hyacinth-like western onion or garlic. It does look a little like an onion, hence the appellation "fool's onion," but there is no slightest resemblance to any hyacinth I have met with. Like the sneezeweed, it favors a heavy soil, but I have never before seen the two plants growing together. The Brodiaea certainly does well on these flats, which in Winter are often under water, for its blossom clusters contain as many as twenty or more flowers, each segment marked by its strong green line from base to tip, while within are the six anthers borne on their ring of united triangular filaments.

At our feet among the grass are the little yellow flowers of the lesser spearwort, growing erect with slender lance-like leaves, its small flowers occasionally with a double allowance of petals. This is the variety of Ranunculus flammula known as unalaschensis because its type locality is at Unalaska. As we go nearer the pond where the ground is wetter, its place is taken by the creeping lesser spearwort, indistinguishable in flower but with leaves that look like spoons in which the bowl has been greatly elongated and narrowed. This variety of R. flammula is known as reptans because of the manner in which the slender stems run through the wet herbage, rooting themselves here and there at the joints until the ground is often covered with a network of pale green threads. But these do not exhaust our buttercups of the low meadowland, for here grows the tall, pale green Ranunculus alismaefolius, or the buttercup with leaves like the alisma or water-plantain. Like the Unalaska lesser spearwort, this buttercup has lanceolate leaves, but they are very much larger both in length and breadth. The flowers are also greatly larger. While not the same species, this buttercup may well have the name of the corresponding British one, the great spearwort, a designation at least briefer than the more literal "water-plantain spearwort." It is interesting to know that if we were to visit a similar spot in the British Isles or on the northern part of the continent of Europe, we should very likely find the counterparts of these three buttercups, just as we should of the water forget-me-not, the wild mint and the brooklime speedwell. Many a one who has been sick at heart among strange countenances and customs has found comfort in the familiar faces of wild flowers, familiar even where botanists have seen specific differences.

In Meadow Sedges

IT is impossible to go through our little meadow without in some sense noticing the sedges, for even if we perceive no beauty or use in them, the harsh stems and rough blades of so many of them make us feel their presence. Yet they are for the most part striking plants. Their foliage is commonly a somewhat olivaceous green and their inflorescence takes on a variety of forms, which makes up in part for the absence of the colors we denominate attractive and is expressed in black, brown, russet and yellowish green. Of their flowers you see the stamens and stigmas, but the corollas and calyxes of higher plants are represented only by tiny bristles or scales. In some species like the slough sedge, the staminate flowers are isolated in slender spikes with the pistillate ones in thicker ones below; in others, the flowers have both stamens and pistils, as in the meadow sedge. One very noticeable species is the one-sided sedge, which forms little forests of its own, the clustered flower spikes with conspicuous bracts that stand out stiffly and angularly from the summit of the stem. One kind in striking contrast is the creeping spike-rush, whose dark green stem bears at the top a little cone-like head of flowers about half an inch long, while its only leaves are sheaths of brown and green close to the base. It is found not only on this coast, but around the northern hemisphere in Europe and Asia from the sub-arctic regions as far south as Florida and California, but always where there is either water or wet ground. Among the grasses the most beautiful one is the tufted hair-grass, which also is a lover of wet places. It has all the grace that the sedges lack, with added colorfulness. Growing as high as four feet, it bears a delicate plume of innumerable flowers with a color that can perhaps be best described as a silvery green with a purplish tinge, depending momentarily on sun and breeze for its effect. It is interesting to see it here with the sedges and the spearworts and then read in an English writer: "It flowers in June and July among spearworts and other marsh flowers. . . . On such spots it attains great luxuriance; but when the land is drained, it soon disappears; and when we see it, as we often do, growing among the different species of sedge . . . we have sure indication the land is not in good condition." Like many plants of the older countries, it has in Britain a number of popular names such as hassock-grass or tussack-grass, rough-caps, bull-faces—I know not why—and silver-grass, the last a peculiarly fitting one.

The Fringed Clover

DOWN where the spike-rushes grow the fringed clover covers the adjacent ground with its purplish red flower-heads. It is one of our native trifoliums, and like most of them has an involucre or collar below the clustered flowers, the lobes of the collar cut into fine teeth that form a green fringe. The stipules or leaf-like appendages at the base of the flowering stalks are likewise fringed. The flowers are touched at the tips of wings and standard with white. Then moving away from the water we suddenly come on a sheet of blue where the ground is covered with the lovely flower clusters of another brodiaea, the harvest brodiaea, or hyacinth, Brodiaea (Hookera) grandiflora or B. (H.) coronaria. It almost rivals the gentians in the depth of its color, though its blue, unlike theirs, is of a violet hue. It is the first time I have seen it growing in a place like this, usually it prefers well-drained and dry land, not infrequently where rocks outcrop, but here it is greatly flourishing where water undoubtedly lies at times, although back from the more swampy ground and now thoroughly dry. It is a purely Western plant and its blue flowers are to be found from our Island right down to Mexico west of the Cascades and the Sierra Nevada.

Coming back by the path, we see the common prunella or self-heal along the dry border of the hill, and note that while many of the plants bear the usual violet-blue flowers there are at one place those that have bright pink flowers, and a very charming picture they make. These color sports are not, of course, rare, and the prunella indulges in them from time to time. You may remember last week I told of blue and white ones. The pink variety is very common on the coast of Washington, near Port Crescent, in fact, almost commoner than the normal blue. I found it last year near Muir Creek. On our left we see Scouler's St. John's-wort growing, a native species named after Douglas' companion in the botanical exploration of the Pacific Coast. It resembles the European Hypericum perforatum naturalized here, but lacks the sharply acute calyx-lobes of that species. Both of them have glandular spots, some of which on the leaves are clear, while others on both leaves and petals are black. Some of my readers may be interested to know that an ointment made from the flowers of the perforate St. John's-wort used to be greatly prized. Miss Pratt in her "Flowering Plants of Great Britain says: "The pellucid dots in the foliage are full of an essential oil which indeed pervades the whole plant and which is aromatic and astringent. The flowers are made into gargles, lotions and salves, and some good botanists recommend that further trial should be made of their remedial powers. The author has much faith in the efficacy of ointment made from St. John's-wort, and could go willingly now, as she did in the days of childhood, over dale and hill to bear away a basketfull of its blossoms for domestic use. The plants when gathered were put into a large vessel of water, forming thus a magnificent nosegay, and the flowers being picked off the stems daily as they expanded were finally made into a salve which served well to heal the scratches or more serious wounds made during rambles among bush and brier, and which certainly healed them quickly and surely."

Rosy Pink Blossoms

REGARDING the road we find on the other side of it, quite a goodly company of pyrolas or wintergreens, their red flower-stems rising above their long-stalked oval basal leaves. Many of them were carrying their rosy pink blossoms and some had got so far as to exhibit their seed-vessels, each with its curved pistil protruding. The species is known as Pyrola bracteata, or by some botanists as Pyrola rotundifolia variety bracteata. With these ericaceous plants we find another, the dwarf bilberry or blueberry. Its blossoms are over, but beneath the leaves are one or two fruits, one showing already a decided purplish tint. The small thin obovate leaves are slightly flushed with purple as if they, too, are sharing in the ripeping processes of the fruit. This species is known as Vaccinium caespitosum; it used to be quite common about Beacon Hill and Gonzales Hill. This is one of the plants found on the north hillsides of the bunch-grass country of the Interior and from Alaska to Labrador and New England and south on this side to California and Colorado. Here it is not far distant from our pool—between it and the lake—where the dry hillside meets the moist meadow and where a grateful shade protects it partially.

Our ramble of only a few hundred yards at most has shown us something of the resources of Nature, of her freshness and novelty of her adaptations and contrivances. As Richard Jefferies says: "A fresh footpath, a fresh flower, a fresh delight. The reeds, the grasses, the rushes unknown and new things at every step—something always to find, no barren spot anywhere or sameness." And in another place "The woodlands are pleasant, however many times reduplicated, their beauty only increases. So, too, the Summer days; the sun rises on the same grasses and green hedges; here is the same blue sky, but did we ever have enough of them? No, not in a hundred years! There seems always a depth, somewhere, unexplored, a thicket that has not been seen through, a corner full of ferns, a quaint old hollow tree, which may give us something." How true that is!

Pioneer Metchosin Church Reviews Sixty-Five Years

By DR. J. K. UNSWORTH

EVEN a casual reading of Eastern Canada newspapers impresses one with the numerous century-old or more-than-century-old institutions in the older sections of the Dominion. Many churches have celebrated their centenaries during the past few years. The present writer, it happens, has been associated with three congregations in Ontario, one of which was rural, which commemorated their beginnings of one hundred years ago.

Western Canada being younger than Eastern, and British Columbia being senior among the western group, we on the Coast are not yet eligible for the centenary class. The oldest church, the Anglican District Church, predecessor of Christ Church Cathedral, Victoria, might claim standing, as it dates from 1856. St Andrew's Roman Catholic Cathedral was opened in 1858, Pandora Street Methodist Church two years later, St. John's Anglican Church in 1861, and only in January last did First Presbyterian Church celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary.

Rural congregations being naturally formed later than the urban, the celebration next Sunday of the sixty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of the Anglican Church of St. Mary the Virgin, at Metchosin, is of historical significance. Its foundation-laying belongs to the earliest days of rural settlement in British Columbia. Its worshippers were pioneers of the bush, men of the axe and gun, whose highways were but rugged trails among stumps and rocks.

The pioneers of Metchosin foundationed their community life in education and religion. The schoolhouse became in 1871 the place of worship for two years, when Rev. F. B. Gribbell, a familiar name in early Anglican history of this district, traveled on horse back on the lonely road from Victoria to Metchosin, to hold service once a month and later every second Sunday. Occasional services had been held in the district as early as 1862.

Pioneer Donated Site

A PERMANENT place of worship was the next step of the young community. Among the men of that early day stands out the name of John Witty, whose generosity in donating land for church, cemetery and school is remembered in a memorial tablet on the church wall. It was given to this pioneer to see the corner stone laid, but not the consummation he longed for. Two days before dedication he passed into the Eternal House, "whose builder and maker is God."

The foundation stone was laid on July 24, 1873, by Mrs. Hills, the wife of the Bishop of Columbia, in the presence of Bishop Hills, Sir James Douglas and others. The service was conducted by Rev. F. B. Gribbell, the sermon preached by Rev. G. M. Sutton, chaplain of H.M.S. Repulse, then lying at Esquimalt, and the singing led by members of St. John's Church, Victoria. Honorary mention is coming to those who sponsored the Christian venture. The church wardens were Messrs. Thomas Glee and Hans Larse Helgerson. The members of the church committee were B. W. Pearce, Robert Weir, J.P., John Parker, Edmond Ropman, John Witty, Geo. Pears, Arthur Peat and John Lawrence.

Sturdily built of British Columbia fir, the longitudinal girders under the joists hewn from stout local timber, the church structure has well weathered the years. The pews, too, the font, reading desk and pulpit are all part of the original furnishings as they appeared on the day of dedication sixty-five years ago.

St. Mary's has been distinctively a community church during the passing decades. Here were the young folks married, here children were baptised, here under the Garry oaks their dead were laid away. Clergymen belonging to Christ Church Cathedral and St. Paul's, Esquimalt, performed the sacred offices for nearly forty years. The following were those in charge from 1882: Rev. W. W. Malachi, 1882-86; Rev. R. Read, 1887; Rev. W. W. Bolton, 1888-90; Rev. W. E. H. Ellison, 1891-93. Archdeacon Scriven, 1894; Rev. W. E. H. Ellison, 1895-1900; Rev. W. W. Bolton, 1901-04, Rev. C. R. Baskett, 1905-06; Rev. W. Baugh-Allen, 1910.

Had Resident Minister

A NEW order of things came in 1911, when Rev. H. B. Hadlow, who came from the diocese of Qu'Appelle, was appointed by Bishop Perrin to the sole charge of Metchosin, Colwood and Rocky Point, and became resident minister. His ministry lasted but two years, but during that period the first vicarage was built. Mr. Hadlow, on being appointed to St. Michael's, Royal Oak, was succeeded by Rev. A. E. deL. Nunns, now Archdeacon Nunns, rector of St. Mary's, Oak Bay.

Rev. F. V. Venables, now rector of St. Saviour's, Victoria West, was locum tenens for part of 1916, to be followed in 1917 by Rev. L. A. Todd, who came from the West Coast Mission, later leaving for the diocese of Keewatin. His work was continued by Rev. C. Swainson, who came in 1918 and resigned two years later to become assistant at Christ Church, Vancouver, and at present archdeacon in the diocese of Calgary.

During the incumbency of Rev. F. Comley the present modern vicarage was built on the Happy Valley Road, a cement foundation was laid under the church, and in 1923 the fiftieth anniversary was observed. After a five years' term Mr. Comley was transferred to the Indian work at Alert Bay.

The present rector, Rev. H. M. Bolton, took over the work in 1925, his term of thirteen years constituting the longest in the church's history. Shortly after his arrival, Rev. W. C. Gemmill, retiring after several years of missionary work in Japan, took up his residence in the parish and has been a valuable assistant to the vicar in the church services and work of the parish.

Church Wardens' Service

VERY notable is the fine service that has been given by the church wardens and members of the church committee. William Fisher was vicar's warden for seven years ending 1890, and A. H. Peatt was people's warden for ten years ending 1891. The record for long term of office as vicar's warden goes to G. F. Weir, who took duty in 1905 until 1921.

The vicar's warden at present is H. S. Jordan, who succeeded H. G. Pierce in 1934. In addition to being vicar's warden for several years, Mr. Pierce acted as vestry clerk for eighteen years, and also filled the position of organist. By his demise in 1934 the church lost an energetic officer and faithful servant.

The present people's warden is F. F. Frudd, who was elected on the church committee in January, 1919, appointed warden in 1920, re-elected each year to the present time, also acting as vestry clerk. The vicar's warden is H. S. Jordan, and people's warden F. F. Frudd. The church committee consists of Rev. W. C. Gemmill, Mrs. F. A. Osbourne, Mrs. G. F. Weir, G. F. Weir, H. Walker, H. E. Bell, W. H. House, A. Anderson and M. Bailey. Mrs. G. F. Weir is organist.

The present incumbent, Rev. H. M. Bolton, who came in 1926, holds the record as vicar, being now in his thirteenth year. His parish is broad and long, including Metchosin, Holy Trinity, Sooke, along with services at East Sooke, Rocky Point, William Head and Albert Head.

The congregation and indeed the whole community is moving toward the anniversary service with great expectation. On Sunday, July 24, the Rev. H. E. Sexton, Bishop of the diocese, will preach at the anniversary service at 11 a.m. and at the confirmation service at 7:30 p.m.

On the following Wednesday a country fair will be held in the Metchosin Community Hall. Not the least interesting part of the varied programme will be a brief opening address by Lindley Crease, K.C., who was present as a child at the laying of the corner-stone in 1873. One or two other old-timers are expected, and thus the long years between the brave old days in the bush and the present will be happily bridged.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, METCHOSIN

Shakespeare Centre

A LONDON Shakespeare Festival, including a Shakespeare Mask Ball, a Shakespeare Pageant Masque, concerts of Tudor music, a recital of Elizabethan instrumental music and an Old London Exhibition, is being held to raise funds for the establishment of a Shakespeare Centre in Southwark, where the poet spent most of his working life. There will also be given, for the first time in 300 years, a performance of the opera, "Damon and Pythias."

The idea of the Shakespeare Centre is to build a replica of the old Globe Theatre on a site on the south bank of the Thames between the County Hall and Blackfriars Bridge. There will also be a replica of the Mermaid Tavern and an Elizabethan Library and Museum. The greater part of the money required for this project is expected to come from the United States, and there is the possibility of a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

President Without a Domain

By J. Edward Norcross

Links With Past—Proposed Royal Tour—Festivals of Music—Thrift Unions—Bonds and Bondholders—Town of Wigan

LONDON (By Mail).—Dr. Douglas Hyde has been inaugurated as President at Dublin and has taken possession of the Viceregal Lodge in Phoenix Park, once the official residence of the Governor-General of Ireland, an office abolished by Mr. de Valera.

But, it has been asked, what is Dr. Hyde President of? He is not President of the Republic of Eire because there is no such republic. He cannot be President of the Republic of Eire, for Eire is a place-name. Mr. Roosevelt is President of the United States, but the United States is an aggregation of sovereign states and a Republic. Similarly the French President is President of the French Republic.

Eire is a Dominion under the British Crown, like the other self-governing Dominions, and therefore, legally a kingdom, and only kings, not presidents, can be at the head of kingdoms.

It looks, therefore, as if Dr. Hyde held a truly Irish appointment. He is a President without any particular presidency to preside over.

* * * * * *

So far as this country is concerned, the precise nature of the office held by Dr. Hyde is of no importance whatever. What is important is that, thanks to the settlement effected between Great Britain and Eire, Mr. de Valera has won a notable victory at the polls and there is every reason to expect five years of peace and concord in cross-Channel relations.

The one great surprise of the Irish general elections was the loss of seats by the Labor Party. This is accounted for in part by the situation in Spain. The sympathies of so Catholic a country as Eire are naturally with the opponents of the Spanish Government, and therefore against a party which favors intervention on behalf of it.

Before the election Mr. de Valera had talked of abolishing proportional representation, which he regarded as inimical to stable government. In view of the results, however, he may let the voting system alone. He has a comfortable majority in the Dail of sixteen over all.

Represents People

THERE are countries in which proportional representation is the lesser of two evils. It is, however, opposed in principle to the British theory of representative government according to which an elected member, no matter what his politics, represents all the people of his constituency, no matter what theirs.

Under the quota system one has the beginnings of delegate rather than representative government. The member goes to Parliament to represent the minority which gave him his quota rather than the whole community.

Proportional representation is useful, however, when there are such deep religious or political differences that there is no pretence of an adherent of one party speaking for his constituents of the other in Parliament. Such was believed to be the case in Eire when the Irish Free State was established. Without proportional representation, it was thought, the Protestant minority would, in effect, be disfranchised.

Happily, there are indications that religious bitterness is dying down. It is a very hopeful sign that Dr. Hyde, the new President, is a Protestant and the son of a Protestant clergyman. He is, by the way, famous as a Gaelic poet and is now engaged in translating English songs into the Irish language, which, it may be mentioned, was the only one spoken during the inaugural ceremonies.

Duke of Connaught

THE other day the Duke of Connaught completed seventy years on the active list of the British Army, having received his first commission as a lieutenant in 1868. The Duke proved a very efficient officer. He saw active service in Egypt. His rank as a son of Queen Victoria, of course, was a factor in his promotion, but, to his and the Queen's great disappointment, it was held to bar him from the highest post of all, that of Commander-in-Chief. His interest in the welfare of the rank and file entitles him to be known as "the soldier's friend."

The Duke of Connaught is one of the last living links with the Duke of Wellington, who was his godfather and after whom he was named Arthur. Victoria people who met His Royal Highness when he toured the West as Governor-General of Canada may, therefore, claim to have known one who had known the great Duke.

One of the most remarkable instances of this kind of personal association with the past was that in which the late King George V figured when visiting Canada as Duke of York in the reign of King Edward VII.

When he was in Montreal an aged nun was presented to him who had been told the story of the landing of Frontenac at Quebec by another nun who had had it direct from a nun who had been an eye-witness of the event, which took place in 1672.

Many people in Victoria will remember Colonel McGregor, who was for many years connected with the old Vancouver World. Those who knew him were also acquainted at one remove with Simon Fraser, the discoverer of the great river that bears his name. For Colonel McGregor was born in the little Ontario town where Fraser, almost forgotten, passed his declining years and knew him well. It was largely owing to the Colonel's efforts that a proper memorial to the great explorer was erected there.

* * * * * *

More fascinating, perhaps, are the living links with the past established by relationship. Early in the reign of King Edward VII The Times reported the death of a Scottish laird whose eldest brother had died in that of George II.

In his last years the younger brother might have said, "I had an elder brother, but I never saw him; in fact, he died 140 years ago."

An even more astonishing case is mentioned in his autobiography by Mr. James Agate (pronounced Aye-gate), the distinguished dramatic and literary critic. An old lady in 1884 said to somebody: "I am astonished you cannot make up your mind about Oliver Cromwell. My dear husband's first wife's first husband knew him well and liked him much."

Cromwell died in 1658, so the interval bridged by the series of marriages was 226 years. As Mr. Agate remarks, it is just possible.

I leave it to my readers to work it out for themselves, merely remarking that in pre-Victorian days it was no uncommon thing for girls to marry at fifteen, and it is still not unknown for old men to marry very young women. Obviously "my dear husband" must have been captured by a widow a good deal older than himself.

Coming Royal Tour

IF memory serves, the postponement of the visit of the King and Queen to France is the first great state function to be so affected by the illness or death of a royal personage, or a near relation of the Sovereign, since 1902, when the coronation of the late King Edward VII had to be put off, almost at the last minute, owing to his sudden and serious indisposition.

The wonder is that such delays, or even cancellations, do not occur oftener. There are several aged members of the royal family and had any one of them passed away at a critical time the Silver Jubilee and Coronation celebrations perforce would have been considerably modified. The religious ceremonies might have been carried out according to programme, but the rejoicing associated with them would have had to be sadly curtailed.

This nearly happened, in fact, when Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee was observed. A near relative of the Queen, a German princess, died when the festivities were at their height. Her demise was kept secret until they were over, not even the Queen herself being informed.

The delay in the state visit to France is not without its bright side for Paris. It gives more time for putting the final polish on the preparations, and it means extending the social season for a fortnight.

Normally the "dead season" in Paris begins after the Fete Nationale on July 14, but with the royal visit closely following, the fashionables who had planned to leave then will now stay on—to the great benefit of the Paris shops, hotels and theatres.

Not improbably Their Majesties would have preferred a longer postponement, but Paris is deserted in August and September, and in October the open-air part of the programme would have had to be abandoned—and it is nearly all "open air."

Duke's Amusements

THE Duke of Kent's predilection for the the amusements of the commonalty has been exemplified at Glasgow. It may be recalled that when the Duke, then Prince George, visited Vancouver with his brother the Prince of Wales, now the Duke of Windsor, a dozen years ago, it happened that the Vancouver Agricultural Exhibition was in full swing.

The royal guests, of course, were taken out to see it. In the course of their peregrinations they came across the amusement park and were fascinated with the switch-back railway which at that time had the reputation of being the biggest and most thrilling contraption of the kind.

To the horror of those attending them the two Princes insisted on taking a ride. The Duke of Kent, in fact, took several. Late at night he gathered up a party of young Vancouver people at a public dance given in honor of the visitors and went out to spend another hour or so on the switch-back under the electrics. The Duke of Windsor, mindful of his responsibilities, was satisfied with his one adventure.

At Glasgow the Duke of Kent was accompanied by the Duchess. Having got their official visit to the Exhibition over and having visited the Queen Elizabeth, building on Clydebank, they slipped quietly back to the exhibition and spent an hour in the amusement park.

The Duke, possibly remembering Vancouver, induced the Duchess to take a trip on the scenic railway. He clung to the handrail while she let out breathless little screams—like any lad and lass from a cotton town.

They took in almost everything: the motor track, the Crazy House and other attractions, all the fun of the fair, in fact. "It has been grand fun," said the Duke, as they concluded the escapade.

Festival of Music

"GLYNDEBOURNE" has developed rapidly from small intentions to the greatest of ambitions, namely, the creation of a Music Festival in England where the standard shall be the admiration and envy of all other festivals."

So writes Mr. John Christie in one of the radio journals, who is giving this country the equivalent of Salzburg in the opera house he has built as an adjunct to his Sussex home.

Mr. Christie is the wealthy husband of Vancouver's prima donna, Miss Audrey Mildmay.

To some people it may perhaps seem strange that anyone should have conceived the idea of producing Mozart operas in a remote corner of the Sussex Downs," Mr. Christie continues. "But if Wagner can be performed in a village in Bavaria, why not Mozart in the English countryside? . . .

"It has been referred to as a rich man's hobby. This is definitely misleading and inaccurate. Glyndebourne . . . is a serious professional organization which exists solely for the purpose of producing opera as efficiently as possible, and there is nothing remotely amateur about it, either on the organizing or performing side . . .

"A high price is charged for seats . . . and, since the average cost of producing an opera is $4,500 a performance, prices must necessarily be high."

Replying to the criticism that foreign artists are favored rather than British artists, Mr. Christie says the proportion in the chief roles is half British and half foreign and, he adds, "one of the tangible results of the Glyndebourne venture has been to show that the British artist is as good and better than the foreigner in some roles . . . One fact is certain, and that is that you cannot cast an opera from the nationals of one country alone . . .

"Glyndebourne will continue to be the home of Mozart opera in this country, but not of Mozart exclusively.

"It is my intention to lead the other festivals of the world and not to follow them, and that is why this year I am presenting an opera that has never been given in England before—Verdi's Macbeth.'"

MECHANIZED BRITISH ARMY UNITS

Upper: This is what Britain's enemy will see when it looks over the parapet at "zero hour." Mechanization has progressed to such an extent that British infantry "goes over the top" and through no-man's land like this now. Lower: The bulk of the British Army will make its stand behind light machine guns but, for sustained fire, each motorized division will retain one battalion of heavy machine guns borne in armored carriers like the one in the photograph.

A Giant Rudder

ALTHOUGH it has an area of 509 square feet, the biggest rudder in the world, that under construction for the Queen Elizabeth, weighs only seventy tons.

This is because it is hollow, being built of steel plates one and a quarter inches thick. When completed it will have a man-hole which will give access to a ladder inside from which repairs may be carried out.

The rudder will be controlled by a telemotor and worked by a "robot" on the bridge. If the ship leaves her course the pointers of the compass will flash a message to the "robot" and this in turn will act on the telemotor and so adjust the rudder.

In short, the Queen Elizabeth, once set on her course, will steer herself across the broad stretches of the Atlantic.

Saving for Future

APROPOS of the "thrift" movement in Alberta and the "credit unions" being started there for the convenience of people who want to save a little money by way of preparation for a rainy day, some figures on savings in this country may be of interest.

In my day in the West we were always so sure that we would make lots of money by and by that putting some away did not appeal to us. Not that we spent everything we got on current necessities and current luxuries and extravagances, but we were apt to put all our surplus over and above our reasonable spendings into investments of one sort or another—too often, as many of us found out, into more real estate than we could well take care of.

Up to a point this was justifiable, but we were not careful to keep available a reasonable proportion of liquid assets in the best form—cash in a savings account.

I was surprised, therefore, when I returned to this country a few years ago, to find that everybody seemed to have money in the bank—everybody, that is, except those who had been long unemployed and had exhausted their resources.

It seemed to be the custom among working people of small means to take a fixed sum out of the weekly wage, before any of it was spent, to be added to the deposit in one or other of the savings institutions of the country.

Personal observation was confirmed by statistics published from time to time. From these it appeared that one person in every four of the entire population had a savings bank account and that the average sum to the credit of each, including National Savings Certificates, exceeded $500, the total being $7,200,500,000.

Nor is this the whole story. To these savings, which are those of people of small incomes, must be added sums in building societies and provident societies, which, it is estimated, bring the grand aggregate to more than fifteen billion dollars.

In short, as has been well said, this is a nation of capitalists. There could be no better guarantee for social stability.

Action Appreciated

STRONG language was used in the "City" lately about Alberta's default on its interest on bonds, but Edmonton and Calgary, and also Victoria, were applauded for their efforts to meet their difficulties on reasonable lines.

The occasion was a meeting of the shareholders of the British Empire Trust Company, a financial concern which in past years has directed a good deal of money to Western Canada and whose chairman, Mr. J. Davidson, is one of the greatest authorities in London on Canadian conditions.

To quote the report as given in a leading national newspaper:

"In his speech at last week's meeting of the company, Mr. Davidson devoted a good deal of attention to Canadian bonds and in particular to the disgraceful position of the Province of Alberta.

"The validity of the Provincial Government's action in offering bondholders 50 per cent of their interest if they will undertake this for the whole of the bonds has not yet been tested, but the bondholders' committees are making strenuous efforts to bring the legislation under the review of the courts.

"It is, perhaps, a hopeful augury that the Dominion Government had disallowed the recent confiscatory legislation of the province with regard to money lent on mortgage, and holders of Alberta bonds should certainly take no step to acquiesce in the arbitrary treatment offered them.

"While the province is thus behaving arbitrarily and unjustly, it is gratifying to remember that the municipalities are treating their difficulties on a business basis which appears to be fair to all parties.

"Calgary, Victoria and Edmonton have already concluded satisfactory arrangements and Moose Jaw seems likely to follow suit."

Aid to Workers

IN the matter of workmen's compensation for accidents, the legislation of this country is far behind that of British Columbia. In fact the Compensation Acts here are very much what they were in the West more than twenty years ago.

There is no State fund into which employers and workers pay and from which compensation on fixed lines is drawn regardless of whether the employee was in fault or not.

Employers insure against accidents just as they used to do in British Columbia in pre-war days. Litigation, always costly to the workman, whatever the result, is constantly occurring, although there is now a vast volume of legal decisions creating a multitude of precedents.

Only the other day a colliery company sought to evade liability in a rather curious case. A miner had found himself trapped by a fall of rock and had had to make his way out along a road which was prohibited on account of gas, a fact of which he was aware. He died before he could reach the surface.

The company pleaded that he was disobeying orders in entering the road, and the lower court found this contention sound. Fortunately the Court of Appeal thought differently and rendered a commonsense decision.

Such dispute could not have arisen in British Columbia. The miner's widow would have received her pension without question.

The worst feature of the British law, however, is the doctrine of common employment. If it can be shown that an accident has occurred owing to the default of another employee, the injured employee cannot recover from the employer.

* * * * * *

The trade unions and the Labor Party have been agitating for years to bring about a change in the compensation law. In particular they urge the adoption of some such scheme as that in force in British Columbia, the provision of a compensation fund under a board.

There is, therefore, considerable satisfaction in labor circles in view of the announcement that a Royal Commission is to be appointed to inquire into the working of the Compensation Acts.

Compulsory insurance by employers against accidents, prevention of accidents, dangerous machinery, medical examination before employment, industrial diseases and the vexed question of common employment are all to be included in the terms of reference.

Representatives of the workers will make a strong bid for State compensation along British Columbia lines.

Poor Old Wigan

JUST why Wigan, Lancashire, should be the butt of all other towns, nobody knows. It is highly respectable community which devotes itself largely to the extraction of coal from the bowels of the earth.

Nevertheless, every popular comedian who earns his living by delivering allegedly humorous monologues sooner or later makes a joke at the expense of Wigan. He is sure of a laugh—anywhere outside of Wigan—and he knows it.

The other day an elderly man was advising a young one not to go on the stage.

"Unless," he said, "you are so keen on acting that, having obtained an engagement in a pantomime, you can sit through a wet Christmas day in dreary lodgings in Wigan just to play the hind legs of an elephant."

Excellent advice, but why Wigan?

If you can get the capsule off a streptococcus or a meningococcus or a pneumococcus you will disable it at least until it can grow a new one.

This discovery has been made in connection with a new medical compound, "Prontonsil," and its derivatives.

It has been found that the gentry mentioned above have capsules, or shells, which, it is supposed, serve to protect them against the white blood corpuscles, ravenous organisms which would otherwise devour them.

From experiments made at the Middlesex Hospital it has been found that a derivative of "Prontonsil," called "M. and B. 693," makes pneumococci (the germs which set up pneumonia) vulnerable by decapsulating them, but that the capsules grew again when the organisms are removed to more favorable surroundings.

But, it is pointed out, if one kind of capsule can be dissolved by one kind of compound, it is reasonable to suppose that other kinds of capsules may similarly be dissolved by other compounds, thus depriving hostile organisms of their virulence.

In short, a very important discovery in medicine appears to have been made, opening new possibilities in the war against disease.

This Week's Best Books

By LIBRARY SERVICE

"Education and the Psychology of Thinking," by Percival M. Symonds. This book presents in systematic form a discussion of the psychology of the thinking process with special application to the problem of the development of better thinking in education. The treatment is eclectic, drawing liberally from the dynamic, behavioristic and Gestalt points of view. The book should be useful in stimulating a wider interest and greater appreciation of the problem which education faces in training a generation which can meet its economic and social problems most effectively.

"Platform for America," by Ralph E. Flanders. The book analyzed the problems facing business today—particularly in its relations to government, on the one hand, and the great consuming public on the other. Mr. Flanders develops the theme of the real community of interest of various groups often regarded as independent to each other. He discusses the relations of agriculture, business and labor, showing that no policy or legislation which benefits one of these groups at the expense of another will, in the end, benefit the country as a whole.

"Government in the Third Reich," by Fritz Morstein Marx. Besides bringing all material up to date, the new edition of this interesting study elaborates the lines of political evolution in National Socialist Germany in the light of present-day trends. In general, the book remains a concise, penetrating analysis of the structure and operation of government in Nationalist Socialist Germany. The new edition again reveals the author's keen, realistic insight into contemporary German politics and his clear, vigorous style.

"Choosing Your Life Work," by William Rosengarten. Presents a simple plan whereby the individual may analyze his capacities, aptitudes and interests, compare them with the requirements of representative occupations, and plan his career accordingly. Besides describing practical methods of self-analysis, the book gives clear, concise information on the requirements of two hundred representative occupations, professions and trades. Lists of related occupations have been added to each outline, in this edition, in recognition of changing economic conditions which demand that a man be not only prepared for a single occupation, but that he also be prepared to adapt himself to other occupations as need arises.

"Advancing Front of Science," by George William Gray. Here are important developments in our knowledge of the skies, of atoms and molecules, of the living matter of cells and tissue-findings which are providing bases for further advances, for reinterpretations, for the new world view of tomorrow. Here is a picture of man embattled against certain unknowns of his universe. The story is illuminated with such personal touches, biographical details and laboratory asides as seem of special interest. The reader will understand anew through these pages the spirit, the purpose, the ingenious methods and the amazing successes which make the research laboratory the most romantic spot on earth at the present time and perhaps the most significant.

"Japan Defies the World," by James A. Scherer. Dr. Scherer has taught and visited in Japan since 1892. His book tells how modern Japan has fallen under the control of the militarists, how one-half the wealth of the country is in the control of four families who do their part by manufacturing munitions, and that the real rules of this modern Fascist Government is as greedy as the other dominating factors for world conquest.

"Black and Beautiful: A Life in Safari Land," by Marius Fortie. Autobiography of a man of mixed Italian and Spanish blood, now a United States citizen, who went to German East Africa (later Tanganyika Territory) in 1901 and became a successful trader. He formed alliances with several native women, some of whom had children before he left Africa. Years later he returned and made a long journey inland, in order to locate his ex-wives and children. This book is Africa at its brightest and darkest, with all its savagery, passion and kindliness. It is a wistful and lovely tale this story of an Italian boy's love for Safari Land and its African natives. It is a strange book, too, in its candid quality of "going native," with its idealizations and its emphases, and the form into which the author has built his story. It is, however, a very interesting story, with poetic moments and flashes of humor.

"Radio Engineering," by Frederick Emmons Terman.

"A B C's of Diesel Engines," by Popular Science.

"Audel's Answers on Refrigeration, Ice-Making and Air Conditioning," by Gideon Harris.

"Municipal and Rural Sanitation," by Victor M. Ehlers and Ernest W. Steel.

"Motor Oils and Their Application," by George A. Zamboni.

"Country Cook Book," by Cora Brown.

"Making Home Furniture," by Agnes M. MacKenzie.

"First Steps in Air Conditioning," by A. J. Melliah.

The Knack of Taking Good Snaps

THERE is more in photography than the mere pressing of a button. Very much more!

Oh, yes, I know a child of four can point a camera at an object, release the shutter, and get a fairly good photograph. But it will not be a picture—except, of course, by accident. Perhaps you have never thought of photography in that way. You have thought always of photographs, never of pictures. Believe me, it is far more exciting getting pictures—pictures which your friends will never tire of admiring, pictures which show that behind the pressing of the button there is a brain.

Pictures of this kind, let me add, do not call for a lot of technical skill. Gone are the days when a fellow had to be something of a magician before he could persuade a camera to "do its tricks." Photographic apparatus becomes easier to manage every year, and the high perfection which has been reached in the manufacture of films and plates makes it possible for the merest novice to get satisfactory results with almost every attempt.

If you become conversant with the limitations of your camera, and keep within those limitations, you cannot fail to get good photographs—in a technical sense.

You will know, for instance, that if your camera is anything above the box variety, it will have exposure times marked around the top of the lens, and lens stops around the bottom. If your shortest exposure time is only one-hundredth of a second, it will be foolish to try and photograph a moving object requiring a faster time. A seagull in flight, or a sprinter in action, would probably blurr your negative in one-hundredth of a second. At one-five-hundredth of a second, or even one-three-hundredth of a second, however, you could expect to get a sharp photograph.

The same reasoning applies to stops. If your biggest stop is 6.3, you will be well advised to restrict your work to sunny and bright days out of doors, and sunny days or artificial light indoors. This, of course, unless you give time exposures of some duration. If however, you have a stop as large as 2.5, you will be less dependent on the sun. The rule to remember is: "The duller the weather, the larger the stop." And do not forget that the largest stops have the smallest numbers. Thus, 2.5, as we have seen, is a larger stop than 6.3; 6.3 is larger than 11, and so on.

This question of exposure is an important one—by far the most important on the technical side—and you should never try to work without an exposure guide or a meter. With either of these, however, a correct exposure is easy to find.

Let us turn now to the other side of photography—to the artistic side. Here are a few of the things which go to the making of a good picture.

In the first place, pay particular attention to composition. The first viewpoint you choose is seldom the best. Move about from spot to spot until you are convinced you are about to point your camera at a setting which cannot be bettered.

Make sure there are no ugly objects in the foreground. We are all familiar with otherwise good snaps which are spoilt because in one corner, or in the middle, there appears half of a human being or the hind part of a horse!

See, too, that your backgrounds are suitable. This is especially necessary when photographing your friends—either singly or in groups. Don't ask your best friend to pose in front of a chicken-house, or standing next to a drainpipe! Further, remember the rule that light objects should be photographed in front of a dark background, and vice versa.

When photographing landscapes, beauty spots, and so on, look for a special point of interest. I would add, also, that the picture is not at its best unless this point of interest is in the correct position.

There is an easy way of fixing this position. It is by following what we call the "rule of thirds." Imagine the scene before you divided horizontally into thirds and vertically into thirds. These thirds intersect at four points. Your point of interest should be situated on one of these—preferably on one of the bottom two.

The point of interest should naturally be in keeping with the surroundings. If, for instance, you are photographing a country lane, it might be a wagon-load of straw or a pair of plough horses. A condition which prevents many photographs from becoming pictures is what we call "camera-consciousness." For some unknown reason, the majority of amateurs cannot think of taking a photograph of a human being without insisting that the subject look straight in the lens. You know the sort of thing. You come across a kiddie of three or four, perhaps, playing with a dog. "That would make a jolly good photograph!" you think; but having got your camera, you must needs say: "Look at me!" or "Watch the dicky-bird!"

Never ask your subjects to look away from the work in hand. You will get far better results—pictures, in fact—if you snap them when they least expect it and when they are absorbed with their task.—By G. T. Matson, from The Girl's Own.

BEARS HAVE TASK OF BATHING THEIR CUBS

How to Improve Your Tennis

By ROSEMARY THOMAS, from The Girl's Own

SUMMER at last, which means fine weather—we hope! and which, again, means lots of tennis. And, let us resolve, better tennis than last year.

If it is to be really better, we must, before play actually starts, set about thinking what we can do to make it so. To play tennis really well physical fitness is an absolute necessity.

One of the best exercises that I know, both for general health and for quickening the feet and toning up the muscles, is skipping. Why not start each day with a skipping rope for three minutes? Not more than three minutes at one time, as it is a very tiring exercise and, if overdone, apt to strain the heart. Skating is also good for strengthening the ankles, and dancing for suppleness and poise. It is very important for us always to be on our toes during a game, although opinions differ as to how much actual "pedaling" is necessary. Some people do not raise their heels off the ground at all, while others jig about incessantly, like cats on hot bricks. I once saw a boy playing in a tournament who had evidently been told to keep "on the move." He ducked so low and leapt so high into the air that he was hardly ever in the right place to hit the ball when it came over the net. And he looked so funny!

The arm and shoulder muscles are also important. The best thing that I know for loosening these is club swinging—a pair of Indian clubs or, better still, a pair of sceptres can be quite easily and cheaply obtained from any sports dealer. But one word of warning. Let us be careful not to buy them too heavy, or we shall be stiff for days.

In addition to this, it would be a good plan to swing our rackets every day for a few minutes without a ball, say two minutes' forehand driving, two minutes' backhand driving and two minutes' service swing.

When it is fine it is lovely to do this out of doors, but we can easily do it indoors on a wet day, as long as we first make sure that there are not too many china ornaments within our reach and that we do not release our grip on the racket! It would be best, of course, if we could do this racket swinging in front of a big mirror to see that the position of our feet is correct (never facing the net!) and that our swing is absolutely unbroken and perfectly rhythmic.

On fine days if there is a flat wall anywhere near, with a reasonable amount of space in front of it, it is very good for us just to knock against it, practising only good strokes and good footwork.

Of, if there is no wall available, it is just as good, and perhaps more fun, to find a girl friend, about our own standard and with a lot of patience and keenness, with whom to practise strokes—not to play sets, as this is inclined to make us push the ball over the net to try to win the point, instead of going out for our shots as we should.

Those of us who are lucky enough to be having a birthday fairly soon or who have a rich godmother who hands out money on sight should get some tennis books. There are quite a number of really useful ones written by some of the leading players.

Boasting Robbie

Raymond said to Robbie Rue:
"I can run as fast as you."
"No, you can't," he made reply;
"No one runs as fast as I.

"No one yet has beaten me.
I can run as fast can be—
Like a motor car or train—
Almost like an aeroplane!

"No one else can jump as I;
I can jump as high as high!
One foot, two feet, three or four—
I shall win the prize, I'm sure.

I shall win," said Robbie Rue. . . .
But when Sports Day came at last,
Though he ran so very fast,

Ray and Jack ran faster still.
Robbie thought it most absurd
When he only came in third!

To his sorrow and surprise
Robbie did not win a prize—

The New Dog

(We read that more and more dogs are going by air between England and France.)

Our Scruffy was an Airedale
When first he came to stay,
But he has changed completely
Since he has been away.

He flew from London's airport
Across the narrow sea,
And then from France came home again
To keep us company.

Superior to his station,
Our Scruffy sniffs around
As if too high his notions
For a dog so near the ground.

Our Scruffy, we confess it,
Is vain as vain can be.
He was an Airedale once, but now
An Airmail dog is he!

A Member of the Stork Family

WORKERS on a farm at Mendham, near Harleston, in Norfolk, England, were astonished the other day when they found a huge bird had arrived suddenly.

It was a marabou, a member of the stork family, who had apparently escaped from some zoo. Information as to its presence was sent to the London Zoo.

The bird appeared to be suffering from exhaustion, and was unable to rise from the ground for any distance, but when it did get up its wings extended about ten feet. When first seen near the farmhouse it was very hungry and quickly devoured a dead chicken which it found near a dyke, and later a young dead pig! While it would not allow anyone to approach very close, the bird was reasonably docile.

Joe Goes Home

A WIRE-HAIRED terrier owned by a family at Faversham was lately sent as a boarder to some kennels at Harrietsham, England, while his owner was away.

While being exercised one afternoon, Joe, apparently not caring for hotel life, slipped his lead and disappeared. A wide search was made, but no trace of the dog could be found, and when his master called for him on the following day he was still missing. Joe's master drove home, a little sad, but there, outside the front gate, in his usual place, the terrier waited to greet him.

Harrietsham is twelve miles from Faversham, but, apart from being tired, Joe is none the worse for his adventure.

Quills

A QUILL pen cutter carries on his trade in the West End of London, after being fifty years in the business. He turns out nearly 1,000 pens a week. Goose quills are employed as a rule, but pens for fine decorative work are made from crow's quills.

Array of Dolls in Montreal

IN a big house at the top of Drummond Street in Montreal live 300 dolls. Mrs. Thain W. MacDowell has dolls there to satisfy the hearts of hundreds of little girls.

Nevertheless, she has gone on adding to her collection all her life. It is her hobby, and, recently, when a doll show was staged in Montreal, the exhibits of Mrs. MacDowell were easily the most numerous and diverse.

She has dolls from all parts of the world and they range from inches in height to a fraction of an inch.

"Never Too Big"

WHEN she was fourteen years of age, her mother asked Mrs. MacDowell what she would like for a present, thinking that she was then too old to go on accepting dolls; but the reply came, "I shall never be too big for dolls."

"They have been a passion all my life," Mrs. MacDowell added in the course of an interview.

She had no little girls of her own, just two boys, and, as may be imagined, neither shares the interest of the mother in collecting dolls.

Apart from the dolls she received as a girl, Mrs. MacDowell has added to her collection in a tour of the world she made in 1927, in a cruise through the West Indies, and she has been helped by friends who, knowing her passion, have always been on the alert to contribute to her store of little ladies—oh, and little gentlemen, too, for many of her creations are in pairs.

Her greatest desire at the present time is for a wax doll. She has wooden jointed, in China, West Indian clay, native clay from the Yukon, and balata from Barbados, B.W.I. But she does so badly need one made of wax.

Educational Value

MRS. MacDowell claims her hobby has a definite educational value. For her models represent different races and they are dressed in period clothes which constitute a link with other days. For example, she had a doll as it was sent from Paris in 1875 illustrating what the young bride of that year ought to wear, if she was to be dressed in the height of fashion.

Then, there is a set of fifteen Japanese festival dolls and these are a reminder of a picturesque Oriental custom. Every year, she explained, boys and girls take part in this festival and the dolls are attired in such a way as to indicate the status of their owners.

From the City of Quebec she has received eight or nine models from the religious organizations demonstrating the authentic attire of the various orders.

First Eye Lashes

DATING from 1899 or 1900, she has one of the first group of eye-lash dolls ever to come to Montreal.

Other interesting specimens include Indian dolls also, and two corn cob dolls from Kentucky.

Monkey Thinks It Out

DR. Frank M. Chapman, of the Natural History Museum of New York, has been making a film showing the habits of certain monkeys on the island of Barro-Colorado.

These monkeys live in the tree-tops and have fixed highways along which they can pass by springing from tree to tree, and Dr. Chapman noticed that at one place a tree had been blown down, leaving a gap in the aerial highway.

When the tribe arrived at the spot they held an obvious consultation, and agreed on a new jump of about twenty-three feet at a downward slope. The chief went first, and the others followed, until a mother had to make the jump with her young one on her back. She had a good look and concluded that it was too risky; but the difficulty had to be got over, and finally she selected a place for leaving the youngster, made the jump herself, and climbed to a higher level until she found a branch which bent down under her weight. This branch and her own body made a bridge along which the little one could more safely venture.

It was a well-thought-out scheme, decided on before she made her first jump, and certainly proved a very high degree of intelligence.

The Mice in the Motor

THREE mice stopped the working of a fifty h.-p. electric motor which drives the looms in a weaving shed at Gildersome, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, England.

They were found inside the motor, with pieces of leather and other hard substances that they had evidently carried in. These had set up friction, which ignited the fluff that invariably collects in motors, and thus caused a breakdown.

Why does a sailor know there is a man in the moon?—Because he has been to sea (see).

Clever Ants

HAVE you ever spent half an hour watching ants scurrying around? Maybe you think it would be a waste of time; but if you use your eyes carefully you'll be amazed at the cleverness of these tiny creatures.

When building their homes, they display wonderful skill. Then again, you'll see a tiny ant trying to take back to its home a piece of bread several times its own size. It will drag it along, and if it comes to a "hill," it will try again and again, until at last it gets the food over the top.

A lady explorer says she once watched ants building a nest. Suddenly one side of the nest cracked open. Immediately several ants scurried there and, holding both edges of the crack with their fore and hind legs, they stayed there until other ants could fill in the hole. And they had to stay there, without moving, for five whole days before the "repair" was finished to their satisfaction. There's patience for you!

At the Sea-Side

"COME along, Ann! I want to explore the caves at the other end of the beach," said Donald.

"You are always wanting to explore, but you never find anything," replied his sister. "I would much rather go on the sands and give my dolly a bathe or build a castle."

"If I come with you this morning, will you come with me this afternoon?" Donald asked. "I feel sure we shall find something exciting in the caves."

Mother had bought it for her especially to take to the seaside, so that she could let it float on the water. It was nearly as big as a baby, and Ann had made her a bathing suit of pink and blue, of which she was very proud.

"Let's make a castle first," said Donald, "and we will dig a moat around it and then make a channel to the sea, so that the water can surround the castle as the tide comes in."

They set to work, and before very long had built a lovely castle with a deep moat around it, which very soon filled with water as the tide was coming in quickly.

"I can sail my boat in it," said Donald.

"And Dolly can have a bathe!" cried Ann, and they watched with joy as the water rose higher and higher and the doll floated along behind the ship.

"Let's collect some white stones to make a turret to the castle," said Donald, and the two children ran up the beach to find pebbles of the right size and shape.

"We must have a flagstaff and some seaweed for a flag on the top of the tower, to make the castle complete," said Ann, after they had put the white pebbles to form the turret.

"We shall have to make haste or the waves will be up to the castle wall," Donald said, as the two set off in search of seaweed.

Off they ran, but, sad to say, just as they drew near to the castle a great wave swept right over it, upsetting the ship, whose mast stuck in the casale wall, and carrying the doll into the sea.

"My doll! My doll!" cried Ann. "Do save it!" But it was already floating away far out of reach.

"If only Jock had been here he would have swum out after it," said the little girl, her eyes filling with tears. "Oh, I do wish I had not brought her with me! If I had gone to the caves as you wanted me to do, I should not have lost her."

"Never mind, old thing," said Donald soothingly. "I expect Mother will buy you another, or it may perhaps be washed up on the shore later on. It was lucky my ship had a mast to stick in the sand or I should have lost that too."

"I suppose we had better go home now and tell Mother about it."

It was nearly dinner-time when they got back, and it was a very sad meal, for not only had Ann lost her doll but Mother could not think what had become of Jock!

"I left him outside when I went into one of the ships on the seafront, and when I came out he was gone. I whistled and called to him and looked everywhere, but he was nowhere to be seen, and I hoped he had come home, but he has not done so."

"Do you feel like exploring the caves, Ann," asked Donald after dinner, "or would you rather go and see if your doll has been washed up?"

"I don't suppose it has," answered his sister, "and I promised to go to the caves this afternoon."

The two children set off, with leaping-poles this time, instead of spades, as they thought they might be of use in clambering over the rocks and climbing up the cliff.

"Aren't the rocks slippery?" cried Ann, as she tumbled down for the third time.

"That's because the tide has only just gone out and the seaweed has not had time to dry yet," replied Donald.

"There are the caves!" he cried presently, pointing to some holes in the cliff that were barely above high-water mark and therefore not safe to visit except when the tide was out.

"I don't suppose you will be able to scramble up, Ann, but I will go and explore and tell you what I find."

"What's that noise?" asked Ann presently. "It sounds like a dog barking."

"What is it, Don?" she called.

"Look, Ann!" he cried. "Jock must have seen your doll in the sea and swum out to rescue it, and then got stranded in this cave, where he went to sleep until our voices awakened him."

As the three of them hastened home to tell the good news to Mother, Donald said:

"There, Ann! Didn't I say I was sure we should find something exciting in the cave?"

"Yes, you did! And I'm very glad we came!"

Captain Cook's Monument

Like a sentry keeping watch over the village where years of his boyhood were spent, the monument is Yorkshire's tribute to one of the greatest of its sons.

Now we hear sad news of it. It seems that the vandals in our midst will even climb the heights to destroy what ought to stand unharmed. Nine of the railings have been torn from their base stones, a piece of the monument has been chipped away, and hooligans have dared to carve their names in this exalted place.—From The Children's Newspaper.

The Camel

THOSE who know a good deal about camels claim that they are the most useful animals in the world. The camel has been called the train of the desert, and it can travel thirty miles a day for weeks on end. No other creature seems to possess anything like the same stamina under similar conditions. Abstinence from food and water for days does not seem to impair its efficiency. The hair is woven into mats, carpets and clothes, the hide into tents, shoes and thongs. The beast provides meat and milk, and its dung is used for fuel.

The camel has another asset which can be relied upon. It has an excellent homing instinct, and animals have found their way 750 miles across the Australian desert when those who have ridden them had no means of finding out their direction.

The Dying Swan

THE swan song of a little woodlark was picked up not long ago by a recording van somewhere in Surrey, England.

The van weighed seven tons, the men waited seven hours, and hundreds of yards of wire were laid out, to pick up the song of a little bird weighing two ounces. It is believed to have been its swan song, for the poor bird was found dead a little while after. Little could it have dreamed that its last song would be heard by millions of people, for the other night it was broadcast.

The New Istanbul

ISTANBUL, the ancient and historic city of Constantinople, is to be made new.

For five years work is to go on in accordance with plans drawn up by a French architect, and when the great work of reshaping the city is complete, its most notable buildings will stand out boldly in all their splendor. The famous San Sophia (now a museum) and the Blue Mosque are to be shorn of the buildings crowding round so that they may be seen to greater advantage.

Madonna

THE French village of Mas-Rillier, twenty-five miles from Lyons, will soon have the world's tallest statue of the Madonna.

Though the village has fewer than 500 people, it is a noted place of pilgrimage.

The statue, which is being made of concrete and iron by Serraz, the sculptor who built the famous Christ in the French Alps, will weigh 1,500 tons and be 120 feet high. Its base will be a chapel, and there will be a stairway to a magnificent viewpoint where pilgrims will see the glory of the Rhone and the splendor of the mountains. The statue is to be finished in October.

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE: ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Assembling New Collection Of Rock Plants From Seed

MUCH the cheapest and most interesting way of obtaining a collection of rock plants new to you is to raise them yourself from seed.

It has the additional advantage, too, of the young plants growing up under the conditions under which they will reach maturity.

The very first essential is that the seed should be fresh; that is, recently ripened and harvested. Therefore, where you cannot come by the seeds from your own gathering or from a neighbor's harvesting, be sure to stipulate when ordering that they must be this season's crop.

Most rock plant seeds are best sown in pots, pans or boxes, and not in the open ground or in seed beds. But there are a few kinds which do better if they are allowed to shed their own seed where they are growing.

Outstanding examples or the latter kind are the moisture-loving primulas, such as p. japonica, p. pulverulenta, p. Florindae, p. sikkimensis and erinus alpinus. The idea is, of course, to plant a root or two in good positions and instead of gathering the seed allow it to fall on the ground round about.

For Small Sowings

BUT most other kinds should be hand sown. If you only require a few plants of each kind, four-inch pots are most handy. For larger numbers, use pans or boxes, all of which must be quite clean, and after being well soaked, allowed to drain and dry.

The sowing compost may consist of light, sweet loam two parts, well-decayed leaf mould one part, coarse sharp sand one part. The loam and the leaf mould should be passed through an eighth-of-an-inch sieve.

Well drain the pots or boxes. In a four-inch pot at least one inch depth of drainage should be put in the bottom, consisting of broken crocks, or even clean coal cinders or gravel. In the case of a box or pan the whole of the bottom must have a similar uniform layer.

Over this should be put just half an inch of coarser soil siftings, or preferably leaf mould. Then the pots or boxes should be filled to within three-quarters of an inch of the rim with the prepared soil mixture.

Make the surface as level as possible and finish off by gently pressing with the base of a smaller pot, just sufficient to give a nicely firm smooth surface.

The soil should not, of course, be dry when used, but uniformly moist throughout, without being wet or sticky. This condition is most safely assured by standing the post filled with soil in water half way up their sides, and leaving them thus until it is seen that the surface soil is distinctly wet.

Then remove the pots to an airy place and leave for some hours to drain, until the surface is so dry that all trace of stickiness has gone.

Immediately before sowing, take an old pepper duster and by its means sprinkle the surface of the soil in the pot with just a dusting of clean, dry sand.

Sow Seed Thinly

SOW as thinly as you can. This is quite easy with large seeds, but not so with many kinds which are almost as fine as dust. Sowing will be more readily carried out if you place just a mere pinch of these small seeds in the pepper duster and add four times their bulk of dry sand. Shake well to mix and then pass the duster twice uniformly over the surface of the soil.

The next, and a most important, essential is that the seed should not be covered too deeply. For the largest rock plant seeds a quarter of an inch of very fine sandy soil sifted over the surface is ample, while for the medium-sized kinds, such as aquilegias, an eighth of an inch will suffice.

For the smallest a mere dusting of pure sand is all that is necessary, indeed, for the tiniest seeds no covering at all is better than too much, a very gentle pressure of the bottom of a small pot, just to put the seeds in place, being all that is required.

The position for the pots or boxes until germination is of great importance.

A position which misses the hottest sun or where shading may be applied is best, and a cold frame or box facing north answers well. In the bottom a three-inch layer of sand, fine coal cinders or gravel should be spread.

Maintain Even Temperature

A GREAT help in keeping an even temperature and conserving moisture is to cover the pots with a sheet of glass and to place over this a couple of thicknesses of newspaper. The frame light should not be closed except in very bad, wet weather.

Rock plant seeds differ very widely in the time they need to "come up" and no hard and fast rule may be given. Some may appear in a week, but not many. Most of them need from a fortnight to a month, while a few will not show for much longer.

After the first week, have a look at the pots or boxes at least every other day. Any that are showing should be removed to another part of the frame and shaded from sun by means of tissue paper until they gradually strengthen and become used to full light. During this time the glass covering should be gradually raised.

Let the seedlings remain in the frame or in a sheltered corner where they can be protected from sun and heavy rain until they are in good growth and well hardened off to prick out singly in boxes.

Agricultural Empire in North Last Frontier For White Settler

By THOMAS R. HENRY

(Copyright, 1938, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

IN the Far North lies a new agricultural empire—nearly 700,000 practically unpeopled square miles where roses and honeysuckles bloom and potato vines double their height in a week, and the sun shines nearly all night in the Summer.

This is the white man's last frontier, and if he doesn't conquer it the yellow man will. The challenge was presented before the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Ottawa by Dr. W. D. Albright, superintendent of the Dominion Experimental Station in the Peace River Country, who has devoted nearly a lifetime to the agricultural conquest of the Far North.

But, he stressed, it also must be a cultural conquest. This problem lately has challenged the imagination of the French poet and philosopher, Georges Bugnet, who now is devoting himself to publicizing the new land and to breeding flowers for the settlers. Already he has produced a red rose which may bloom regularly around northern McKenzie Valley homesteads, the Lac La Nonne.

Probably 100,000 square miles in the valleys of the McKenzie drainage system around the 60th parallel of latitude are good for cropping and some of the rest may serve as range country, Dr. Albright said. The problems of living there are to be conquered first, he stressed, by the breeding of new varieties of grains, fruits and vegetables suited to Arctic conditions. This will involve, he said, the testing of thousands of species and varieties.

Just as necessary, he stressed, is to remove the psychological hazard. The popular impression is that the land is bleak and barren. Women shudder at the thought of making homes there. In fact, he believes it can be made a land of fruit and flowers. The French poet now is busy making crosses of other roses and peonies. Other flowers are being tested at Dr. Albright's own station.

Important Economic Crops

FLOWERS and fruits to make life more livable are considered at this stage as important as economic crops. He painted a glowing picture of the land under favorable conditions. Crab apples ripen in open gardens on the southern shore of Great Slave Lake, nearly a thousand miles north of the United States border. Tomatoes ripen on sunny hillsides eight years out of ten. Common wild fruits can be gathered at Arctic tidewater. Eighty miles beyond the Arctic Circle a pioneer named W. D. Clarke is growing pumpkins, phenomenal crops of some garden vegetables, and grains for chickens. The cold, long days seem to be the ideal condition for potatoes. Roses on the hills bloom as late as October. Currants and raspberries bear freely and strawberries and gooseberries sparingly. Corn on the cob can be had by early Autumn, and lilac, honeysuckle and rowan have splendid bursts of bloom. The climate is better than would be expected because of the shelter of the hills and the northward flowing McKenzie.

Both Japanese and Chinese, he found in a recent survey, are acclimating themselves well to the country. One Japanese family is living in comfort more than 500 miles north of the 49th parallel, and there is hardly a settlement without a Chinese restaurant. He stressed that the new land of the midnight sun has its drawbacks and is no place for weaklings. It offers homes only for men of the pioneer qualities possessed by the early settlers of the New World. Cold and frost linger into the Summer, especially in the valleys. Winters are long and almost sunless. Rainfall is scanty, although a good deal of moisture is held in the ground by the heavy freezing.

Care of Rhododendrons

TO keep rhododendrons in good health through the Summer a mulch of peat moss or hardwood leaves is kept on the soil. This helps retain moisture, providing the natural condition to which the plants are accustomed when growing in the wild.

Azaleas like and require the same culture as the rhododendrons; in fact they are now classified as a form of rhododendron. While azaleas object strenuously to lime, they are not so unyielding in their demand for acidity and they can stand more sunlight than rhododendrons. Azaleas are often planted together with rhododendrons. But care is taken to see that the bloom period of varieties that clash is not simultaneous.

If your perennial border was straggly and barren in spots last year, plan ahead of time for annuals to fill in the dull places

OFFSPRING OF A $15,000 SHORTHORN SIRE

Seven shorthorn heifers, nine to twelve months old, sired by "Mulhill Ransom," the $15,000 bull purchased in June, 1936, for the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Ontario, and which died a few weeks ago. There are now twenty-one living calves from this bull and twenty-four in calf at the O.A.C. Several large shorthorn breeders in Ontario have about fifty cows in calf from this famous bull.

Aubrietia and Arabis May Be Increased by Cuttings

AUBRIETIA and arabis can be put to so many good uses that you can scarcely have too many of them. Both plants look lovely in rockery pockets, retaining walls, and in chinks between stones in the crazy path, in clumps at the front of the mixed border, as edgings for beds and borders, in window boxes, and for carpeting Spring beds.

All plants which, like aubrietia and arabis, adopt the cushiony habit, deteriorate after three years unless you propagate anew. The cushions may after that period grow bigger, but the colors of the aubrietia go washy, and the flowering capacity of both plants declines.

It is, therefore, essential to keep working up a young stock, so that at the appointed time you can dispense with the old.

The best way of providing this young stock is by striking cuttings.

One good clump will yield a score or two of youngsters, every one being provided with an entirely new set of roots, and therefore free from all parental encumbrance.

The plants are now full of young growth, and as the season is comparatively young, you have, if you insert without delay, a good chance of raising sturdy stock by September, when you can transfer the rooted plants.

Take the aubrietia first. This plant has a thin-skinned leaf and a lot of sap, hence if you insert the cuttings in a sunny border they will wilt for many a day, and in the end might perish. There is no risk of such a calamity if you plant in a partially shaded border, if possible raised three or four inches above the immediate surroundings.

The Right Soil

FORK the soil a foot deep, incorporating with each square yard half a pailful of sifted leaf mould, or four ounces of prepared hop manure. Break down the lumps well, tread rather vigorously, and when raking the surface even, work into each square yard a tablespoonful of superphosphate.

To insure perfect rooting conditions, cover the surface with a quarter-inch layer of sand.

Choose the cuttings from the outside of the clumps, the youngest and most vigorous part. Sturdy, short-jointed two-inch-long shoots are the best. Prepare each for insertion by removing the two bottom leaves and shaving the stem beneath the bottom joint.

When the young plants are three inches tall, remove the growing point to insure free branching, and give a light dressing of weathered soot monthly until you transfer the aubrietias to their flowering positions.

Make the arabis cutting bed in a sunny spot. This plant is a spindled nuisance in the shade. Work a sprinkling of stable manure with the soil when forking it a foot deep, and having trod fairly firmly, rake into each square yard an ounce of freshly-slaked lime, which to arabis is one of the essentials.

When selecting arabis cuttings, avoid shoots having hard stems or purplish-green leaves. Go for the completely green, healthy growth, two inches being an ideal length.

Predicts New Method of Crop Forecasting

AN exact science of corn, wheat and cotton crop forecasting to replace the glorified guesses which are the basis of present estimates is being developed by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The work, if successful, may reduce greatly the element of gambling with these basic commodities and mean higher prices to farmers and lower to consumers the world over. It was described at the recent meeting at Ottawa of the American Society for the Advancement of Science by Dr. Charles F. Sarle, principal economist of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics at Washington.

An example of the new science is the prediction of corn yield in a certain area by the average height of stalks at the time tassels are formed combined with the amount and depth of moisture in the soil. Such predictions can be quite accurate, according to experiments just reported to the Department of Agriculture from its Iowa State College Experiment Station.

Long-Range Forecasting

HOWEVER, it will be impossible to achieve an altogether reliable system, Dr. Sarle explained, until some system of long-range weather forecasting is achieved. For this purpose the Department of Agriculture now is subjecting all known proposals for foretelling the weather weeks or months ahead to intensive analysis with the idea of devoting intensive effort to development of the most practical. But even without long-range forecasting, he and his associates believe, vast improvements can be obtained over the present system with reports not on the total rainfall over large areas but on the vital factor of the amount of moisture that gets into the ground and studies of the effect of heat at critical times, rather than over the whole growing season.

It has been determined recently that high temperatures when wheat is ripening radically change its quality, cutting down the amount of sugars and raising the amount of proteins in the grain. This is because on a hot day the wheat plant "breathes faster" like a panting dog, the rate of breathing doubling for every additional ten degrees temperature. The energy required for this breathing uses up the already stored sugars.

How Plants Combat Drought

REMARKABLE physiological adjustments made by wheat plants to preserve its life in a drought were reported by Dr. A. G. O. Whiteside, of the Dominion Experimental Farm system.

Dr. Whiteside found on experiment that water-deprived shoots become stunted, like children with inadequate milk, so that there would be less to feed. The osmotic pressure, which causes water and sap to rise in the stalk, increases from 50 to 500 per cent. The cells of the plant undergo a curious change by which it is much easier for water, bearing nutrient materials, to get into them and also to pass to other cells so that there will be an even distribution. At the same time changes take place which make it much harder for the plant to dry out. There is also a great increase in the number of stomata, or breathing organs, on the leaves of the droughted plants.

Divide the Auriculas

AURICULAS must be divided occasionally. Each growth will make a plant if it has some roots attached, but often some growths are kinds of branches of the larger ones, and have no roots.

Try, therefore, to get three or four growths all attached, which can be divided from the parent stem, but one or all having a good quantity of roots. These may be planted only up to the bottom leaf, and it is best to firm the soil round each of the shoots with the fingers.

Bone meal is slow in action and is best added to the surface soil before planting

Propagating Pinks by Means of "Pipings"

IF you examine a clump of pinks you will find there are a number of unflowered new shoots which look quite strong and stand up fairly straight.

Hold the top portion of one of these growths, give it a sharp pull, and it will come away quite cleanly at one of the joints. In fact, it looks as if it has come out of its socket.

The top portion you now hold is a "piping." If you remove two or four of the bottom leaves from this piping it is then ready for striking.

Note the difference between a piping and a cutting, for in the former case no cutting is necessary.

Pipings strike quickly and easily and form a very easy method of increasing stock, especially of named varieties, which, of course, only come true when taken from the parent.

The best medium for striking the pipings is sand. Crock some two-inch or three-inch pots and put a little rough soil over the crocks, then fill up with sand, press it and water.

See that there is enough room left to allow for future watering, but this only means about a quarter of an inch space at the top.

Next obtain the pipings and put them in right away. They should be anything from half an inch to an inch in the sand, the bottom leaves being removed for this purpose. It is essential for the base of the piping to go to the bottom of the hole made to receive it. This is most important.

The number of pipings to each pot must be decided by the size of both, but as a guide, four around the side of a two-inch pot and six in a three-inch pot is sufficient.

When inserted, place the pots in a frame, close the light and shade from bright sunshine. Give a little air each day to clear the frame of moisture and make very sure that the sand never becomes dry.

In about three weeks the pipings should have made roots and as soon as this happens they must be potted into good soil or planted out.

It must be remembered that there is no nourishment in sand. To leave them after rooting is fatal, for they would become thin and very weak, and never recover.

Observing Garden Life May Be Fascinating

THERE are many things around about the garden, not mentioned in books or articles, which afford the observing lover of plants much entertainment and amusement, says F. F. Rockwell, garden editor of The New York Times.

In our modern garden aquilegias, for instance, the spurs, by the art of the breeder, have been greatly elongated. This might have presented a serious problem to visiting bees bent on plundering the tiny drops of nectar in the tips—and transferring (in return for their booty) pollen grains to other blossoms. But the bees soon found a way of getting around this barrier. Instead of entering the flowers with these long spurs, they make holes through the sides of the tubes, and thus reach the sweets.

Little noticed by many gardeners, but among the most fascinating of all plant activities, is the behavior of plant tendrils. The word "activity" is used advisedly, for the delayed, or intermittent, motion camera shows that the long tendrils of many climbing plants actually "feel around" in space for the nearest support.

Having found such a support, the delicate tendril tip quickly winds around it, often attaching itself firmly in a period of a few hours. But this step is only the beginning.

Attached too rigidly to its support, the vine would be likely to be torn or broken by the wind. To prevent this, the long, wiry tendrils of many plants—such as most of the gourds, and the Passion Flower—next proceed to form a succession of coils between the point of support and the vine. This allows a considerable amount of play, while still holding the vine firm at all times. There can be little doubt that such tendrils suggested the first coiled spring—a mechanical device which, among many uses, enables modern humans to sleep comfortably.

Summer Management Of Bees

THE Summer is the most important season to beekeepers, because at this time we expect the major honey flow if all conditions are normal. Even if there is an abundance of nectar-secreting plants, such as the Dutch and alsike clovers, and if weather conditions are favorable during their period of bloom, a good honey crop is not assured unless each colony has a good, prolific queen and an abundance of stores during the Spring, plenty of super room for storing the honey, plenty of room in the brood chamber for the queen to lay, and sufficient ventilation when hot weather prevails.

Queens that have been allowed to occupy two ten-frame full-depth supers up to the beginning of the main honey flow should now be put in the lower chamber and a queen excluder placed over it. Where a shallow super is used as a second brood chamber the queen is not placed below, but is allowed the use of both chambers the entire season. Swarming can generally be detected by tipping the shallow super and looking for queen cells along the lower edges of the combs. If none are found the colony is not likely to swarm. All colonies should be examined every nine or ten days during the active season. If queen cells containing larvae are found destroy all the queen cells and remove the old queen. Ten days later again destroy the queen cells and introduce a young queen; or leave the best-developed queen cell.

Where one wishes to make an increase when removing the old queen remove also three combs of emerging brood with adhering bees, and a comb of honey, place them in a new hive on a new stand and fill up the remaining space with drawn combs. Such increase should be made before mid-July, otherwise the bees seldom build up to a strong colony by Fall.

Provide Ample Space

THERE is much loss of honey each year because beekeepers fail to put on supers in ample time. Frequently the honey flow is on before the beekeepers realize it, and consequently the bees may clog the brood chamber with honey. Under such conditions colonies will swarm in a short time and the swarm often absconds, the result being that the crop of that colony is lost, and sometimes the bees also. To be on the safe side each colony should have at least three full depth supers where ten-frame Langstroth hives are used.

Top supering does away with heavy lifting and saves time. This method places the first super over the brood chamber on top of the queen excluder, the next super on top of the first, the third on top of the second, and so on, and gives as good results as the old orthodox method of placing each super directly above the brood chamber, which meant considerable extra labor where two or three supers were given each colony during the honey flow.

Honey should not be removed from the colony until it is thoroughly ripe, or until two-thirds of the honey is capped over. Placing a wood-wire bee-escape board fitted with two-way bee escapes under the supers to be removed will clear them of bees in twenty-four hours. The honey should be extracted when warm, or as soon as possible after removing the supers. After extracting, strain the honey through two thicknesses of cheesecloth.

As the crop gathered from the Fall flowers is less than that from the clovers, two supers will, as a rule, be all that is necessary for each colony.

Avoid Seeding of Lupins

MANY people leave the lupin spikes to seed after they fade. This is not a desirable practice, on two counts.

Seed protection greatly weakens the parent stock, while the seedlings are mostly duds. They are of the harsh purple variety which most people have done away with long ago. There are sound reasons, therefore, for cutting off the spikes as soon as the flowers fade.

Make the cut immediately above the top leaves. Remove also the older, outer, yellowing or split leaves. They have fulfilled their function and are better dismissed.

Loosen the soil around the plants, feed weekly and alternately with quarter-strength liquid manure (six pints per plant per dose) and superphosphate of lime (one teaspoonful per plant per dose), and your lupins will reward you with a charming second display.

Care of Christmas Roses

ALL through Summer Christmas roses must be given plenty of water, and they will respond to a soaking of dilute liquid manure once a fortnight for the next two months.

The greatest help of all will come from a top-dressing of well-rotted farm or stable manure spread round the plants. If this is not obtainable, a mulch of leaf-mould will prove beneficial.

Keep the plants free from weeds and, before the top-dressing is applied, hoe or lightly fork over the ground and thoroughly soak with water. Thus will moisture be conserved and valuable surface roots encouraged.

Great Britain and the Dominions Overseas

Nearly Quarter Now Work as Clerks—Least Unemployment in Agriculture—Proportion of Women in Industry No Larger

LONDON (BUP).—Great Britain's great stable industries of coal, cotton, steel and agriculture still remain as the basis of her power, but the character of the working population has changed vitally over the past two decades. Today there is the startling fact that nearly 6,000,000 men and women work as clerks, and constitute nearly a quarter of the working population. Therefore one million more people earn their livings in offices than did in 1921.

Some see in this tendency a sign of weakness in Britain, and are urging more forcefully than ever before that more Britons should work on the land as a counteracting influence.

The population of the country is 45,000,000, and of this figure some 32,000,000, or nearly two-thirds, are actually working in some capacity, high or low.

GREATEST ELEMENT

Eleven million housewives form the greatest single element of the country's workers. Thus the rest consists of 21,000,000 people—nearly half the population—who work outside their homes.

Now more than two-thirds of this 21,000,000 are men, and a little less than a third are women. Together they carry on the task of running the nation.

More than a tenth of them are out of work, and these latter are supported by the unemployment insurance contributions of their fellow employed workers and Government funds. Incidentally, of course, Government funds, in the final analysis, are provided by the whole working population through direct taxes and indirect taxes, such as on food and other things.

Heavy unemployment is found in the mining industry, where, of 960,000 coal or other mine workers, more than 150,000 have no work.

Then of 1,300,000 building workers, more than 200,000 are workless. Building workers' wages, so much affected by the iniquities of the weather, are not much higher than the average received by the coal miner, which is usually a little over £2 ($10) a week.

There are 910,000 transport workers. Of these 170,000 are men who work on the railways. Half a million of the rest work in road transport. These road transport workers are the aristocrats among the workers. Their wages are sixty-six shillings and tenpence (roughly $16.50) on the average, and are higher than those of any other group.

THE LOWEST PAID

The industry with probably the least unemployment is Britain's oldest—agriculture. The million-odd workers on the land, though, receive by far the lowest wages—thirty-two shillings ($8) a week.

An ever-increasing number of shops, especially large department stores, has brought the number of shop assistants to well over the million mark. Unemployment here fluctuates, but is not very great.

Then there are 880,000 engineers, with unemployment heavier than would be expected with the country engaged in a huge rearmament programme. About 455,000 men work in the textile trades, and 105,000 are chemical workers. Britain's fish are caught by 45,000 hardy seamen. It takes 617,000 tailors, dressmakers, hatmakers, shirtmakers and bootmakers—including women—to make the average Briton look respectably dressed. It takes 172,000 men to build the country's ships.

From these figures comes this conclusion. Twenty or even ten years ago would have shown the face of Britain's working population considerably different. There has been a great transfer from heavy to light industry.

Thousands of men and women have changed their jobs and have left mining, textiles, agriculture, for light industries, distribution, luxury articles, transport, restaurant work, shop work and so on. Hundreds of thousands of boys are deserting their fathers' trades.

In the short ten years 1921-31 the number of bus and tram conductors increased by 112 per cent, and it is still increasing with the growth of London and other large cities.

MORE TRAVELING

More and more time, it must be remembered, is being spent by every worker in travelling. He no longer lives near his work.

In the same period the number of builders increased by 102 per cent. The number of canvassers increased by 536 per cent. And in those ten years 738,000 new people went into "distribution" and 130,000 into road transport. Coal mining, in contrast, lost 219,000 men.

But the most outstanding change has been in the clerical profession. Let us see how the members of this huge section of the population are made up.

The books of the nation are kept by about 3,330,000 in commerce and industry. The ordinary office worker, that is, is three times as numerous as the land worker. Civil servants are 360,000 strong. Another 1,000,000 work in local government offices, giving us a total army of administrators of 1,360,000, who outnumber, for instance, the country's textile workers.

There are 660,000 professional men, an increase of 135,000 in ten years, and the sick are treated by 33,000 doctors.

Unemployment among the black-coated workers is only 2 per cent.

But what about the women?

A thing that would astonish everyone would be the fact that the proportion of women in industry remains just what it was fifty years ago. After all the talk about women in industry, the number of them who work remains was in our grandfathers' time.

Apart 11,000,000 housewives, 6,000,000 other women go to work. And the largest section of this latter number are the 1,470,000 domestic servants, workers in parlor and kitchen, and bedroom and scullery.

Next comes the million typists and other office girls. Closely following them are nearly three-quarters of a million women and girls who help to make textiles for millions of other people all over the world. Then there are 134,000 nurses to tend to the sick.

Between 1921 and 1931, the number of barbers, hairdressers and manicurists—the beauty trade—increased by 476 per cent. The number of women in trades connected with dress increased by 105 per cent.

AVERAGE EARNINGS

And thus you have 21,000,000 workers. On the average they earn £330 ($1,650) per family a year and spend 28 per cent of it on food, 15 per cent on maintenance of home, they save 11 per cent and are taxed 10 per cent, spend 7.9 per cent on clothes, 5.8 per cent on liquor, 3.3 per cent on smoking, 2.1 per cent on entertainment and sport, and 0.9 per cent on religion.

The tremendous disproportion between the agriculture community and the urban is viewed with alarm by certain sociologists, who consider that the British race will seriously deteriorate unless a closer balance is struck between the numbers who work on the land and those who work in the towns.

At least one thing is reasonably certain. The great drain of workers from the countryside to the towns in Britain is a strong deterrent to any successful migration to the vast barely-occupied areas of Canada and Australia. Once in the towns, these people become rapidly urbanized, and there would be much difficulty in bringing them back to the land again.

That is not to say it would be an impossible task and it is obviously one which should be tried, for it would bring a healthier structure to the country's economy.

One Ticket for Single Passenger Is Six Feet Long

LONDON (BUP). — The longest air passenger ticket on record has been issued by Imperial Airways to W. L. Lang, an Air Ministry official, who is going to Africa to make a survey for his department. It is six feet eight inches long—eight inches taller than the passenger. Covering three months of intermittent traveling, it will take Lang to Laurence Marques, from where he will return to London, alighting at each stopping place on the way back. Each stop adds four inches to his ticket, which will be issued in twenty sections, each four inches long.

MARKET IS REAL CRUX IN PROBLEM

British Empire Chambers of Commerce Report on Migration Question

CONTINUANCE OF VITAL IMPORTANCE

LONDON (BUP). — "Until the Governments of the Empire recognize that markets are the crux of the problem of migration, nothing on a worth-while scale can be done."

Recalling that the last congress of the Chambers in New Zealand in 1936 emphasized the vital importance both to the continued welfare and to the security of the Empire of a resumption of migration, the report adds:

"Of the two aspects of the subject, security might appear to be the more important at this time, when the world is presenting daily evidence of instability. That instability itself is largely due to the widespread distress consequent upon the failure to solve economic problems, and the problem of migration is fundamentally economic.

AXIOMATIC NECESSITY

"It is axiomatic that the Dominion peoples should be reinforced with British stock, but if the population experts can be relied upon, in another few years this will no longer be a possibility.

"Be that as it may, there can be no question that Great Britain is today uncomfortably overcrowded. When the under-nourishment which has been shown to exist among large masses of the population in the United Kingdom is taken into account, there can be no question that an immense potential market for more foodstuffs exists, and the real problem is to make that potential demand effective. Immigrants to grow that additional food would then be welcomed in the Dominions, and in payment for their exported surplus those immigrants would be prepared to receive additional quantities of manufactured goods from this country."

The same problem of economic and defence problems of the British Empire will be discussed by eminent authorities at a conference at Glasgow. This will be the Empire Development Conference to be held in the Scottish Empire Exhibition.

ADDITIONAL MARKET

At this Sir John Boyd Orr will emphasize that provision of means for purchasing adequate nutrition in the interests of physical fitness would create a huge additional market for selected primary products, and thereby give scope for employment on a greatly widened basis both in this country and in the Dominions.

This, he will contend, would go far towards solving the problem of the Dominions by providing increased markets for their products, besides helping to arrest and ultimately reverse the decline in the birth rate by establishing greater economic security for the Empire peoples.

Dependence of the Empire upon maritime trade and its protection will be dealt with by Vice-Admiral E. A. Taylor, M.P., indicating threats against outlying parts of the Empire and trade routes which call for assistance from the Dominions for Imperial defence, necessitating a distribution of man power and industries for the provision of security, thus further widening the basis of employment overseas.

FOR CO-ORDINATION

A resolution will be submitted for the appointment of a permanent committee of the conference to co-ordinate public opinion and effort in the United Kingdom, the Dominions and the Crown Colonies on the imperative need for Empire development, and reaffirming the resolutions of the Guildhall Conference last October, which urged the Government to take the necessary steps in consultation with the Dominion Governments, and to establish a whole-time Empire Development Board in co-operation with similar bodies in the Dominions to initiate, consider and aid in carrying out all forms of useful Empire activities.

RICH REEFS DISCOVERED

New Rand Found in Orange Free State of Great Promise

JOHANNESBURG.—New gold discoveries which promise to become of great importance to the Union have just been made around Odendaalsrust, in the Orange Free State. For some considerable time it had been suspected that the Lower Witwatersrand Series, carrying the rich reefs worked by the Rand gold mines, extended into the Free State.

Geophysical surveys showed inclinations pointing to the presence of gold-bearing reefs, but a very thick layer of lava prevented the drills from reaching the reef horizons.

MAGNETIC SHALES

Some months ago two young geophysicists began to investigate an area about 250 miles away from the Witwatersrand where a payable reef intersection had been made by a drill. Their survey showed the presence of magnetic shales, usually associated with the Witwatersrand system at comparatively shallow depths. Drilling operations were started at once and succeeded in intersecting several highly payable reefs.

Twenty miles of reef have already been proved by the geophysical survey and more boreholes are now being put down to confirm values and depths.

The town and district of Odendaalsrust, where these discoveries have been made, are seething with excitement. Representatives of most Johannesburg mining houses and option hunters are busy securing options, which closure farmers an immediate income of £1 per 100 morgen per month and about £1,000 a month will be spent in the district for the next six months.

LABOR PROBLEM

One of the most important problems of the Witwatersrand gold mines, the supply of native labor, has improved considerably in recent months.

While at present about 334,000 natives are employed on the mines, this number had fallen below the 300,000 mark in December last. At that time it was estimated that there was a labor deficiency of 50,000.

From union sources it is believed that no more than 300,000 native workers can be recruited and the mines will have to depend on tropical labor to a large extent.

Several mines have now taken special measures to provide facilities for these tropical natives, and their death rate already compares favorably with that of local native employees.

SOLDIER COMMENDED FOR SUBDUING DOG

PESHAWAR (BUP).—Lieut. W. H. Barlow-Wheeler, of the 4th Battalion, 11th Sikh Regiment, has been commended by the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Northern Command, for his courage in handling a mad dog here.

The dog entered the compound of the Peshawar Club and attacked a lady and a club servant. The officer seized the dog by the neck and held it for more than half an hour until someone could be found to shoot it. While the shooting was done he held the dog between his knees. By that time he had been bitten ten times.

ELECTRICITY RESTORES AIR

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—A new hair restorer has been discovered at the town of Mullumbimby.

H. Skelton, a member of the council staff, narrowly escaped death when he clutched a wire carrying 415 volts. A fellow-employee saved his life by immediately switching off the current.

Now, weeks after the accident, hair is beginning to grow rapidly on Skelton's bald head.

PERFECT LOST CHILD FOUND IN MELBOURNE

MELBOURNE (BUP). — The Melbourne police claim to have discovered the "perfect lost child."

Two hundred youngsters became separated from their parents after an air pageant, and the perfect child was one of them.

He was only five, but he was able to tell police his father's telephone number, the name and make of his father's automobile, his name, his parents' address, where he was lost and where his parents would probably be.

While the police were informing his parents where to find him, he chatted away brightly about the topography of Melbourne.

HAVE TROUBLES WITH SERVANTS

Darwin Housewives Are Inconvenienced by Frequency of Jail Sentences

DARWIN, North Australia (BUP).—Housewives in Darwin have one aspect of the servant problem which never troubles those in Canada.

Whenever they gather for a chat, there is sure to be at least one housewife who has to apologize for being late because her servant, or one of her servants, has been sent to jail—sometimes for drinking methylated spirits, sometimes for smoking opium, and sometimes for beating one of his wives. In many cases the servants are all black "boys," who have their wives to help.

One housewife will tell another that she is lucky that her servant has been sent to jail for only a month.

"Mine has gone for six months," she says.

Occasionally every servant in a household gets into trouble about the same time and go to jail.

Those who do not go to jail often incommode housewives another way. They leave to go to the maternity hospital.

When the servant is considerate enough to earn remission for good conduct, and turns up for work long before he is expected, he is hailed as a "black angel."

Wool Replaced By Horsehair in House of Lords

Date of History-Making Change in Constitution of the Lord Chancellor's Seat Not Revealed—Burglary Season in London—Rigorous Training for Police Horses

By OLANVILLE CAREW

LONDON (BUP).—Things are not always what they seem. For instance: The Woolsack in the House of Lords whereon sits the Lord Chancellor when he presides over the sittings of the House. Centuries ago, somewhere about the time of Elizabeth, when the Woolsack was first established (or whatever is the appropriate word) it was stuffed with wool—wool being then the staple of the country's trade. Since that day, for years and years visitors to the House of Lords from all over the world have stood around while the Woolsack and its woolen contents and their significance have been explained to them. They have gazed with interest, or awe, or—may it be said?—with a touch of derision at this, if truth be told, somewhat unimposing pouf.

SECRET DISCLOSED

But, just as murder will out, so did the stuffing of the Woolsack. Thus it was revealed the other day that the Woolsack was stuffed not with wool, but with ordinary horsehair.

How or at what time in the course of the centuries the change was made is quite unknown. There seems to be no record of it anywhere so far as can be found out at present.

But now all is well. The horsehair has been ousted, and after a formal ceremony a blend of Dominions, Welsh, English, Scottish and Northern Irish wool fills the Woolsack which is enclosed in a fine woolen cloth instead of the time-honored scarlet leather of the Lords.

BURGLARY SEASON

This is the time of the year when London burglars flourish and those who contrive to continue in unhindered practice during the Summer and early Autumn do very well indeed.

The reason is that the rich and well-to-do citizens of London at this time of the year usually shut up their London homes and go off to the country. And that includes not only the effluent who can take holiday for months, but those of smaller means who can take their two or three weeks' vacation, and for that time close up their apartments or suburban houses. It is then that the burglar makes hay while the sun shines for him.

A first batch of 5,000 warning notices has been printed. These notices are being delivered by the police in selected areas, and the Yard invites householders and caretakers at blocks of apartments to hang them up and take notice of their contents. The notices, which are headed "Help Us to Help You," carry a list of four don'ts and three do's for householders. Here are the don'ts:

SOME USEFUL DON'TS

"Don't leave windows and door open when your house is empty.

"Don't advertise that the house is empty by leaving notes for tradesmen pinned on doors, etc. Stop deliveries or arrange for neighbors to take things in.

"Do make your house difficult to enter. Glass panels and Yale locks are easy. A mortice lock is a great protection and does not cost much. Safety catches on windows are also good—and cheap.

"Do remember that if your house is difficult to enter the thief will go elsewhere. If all houses are difficult to enter he will go out of business.

"Do, please, if you come home and see lights in your house, or if you see lights in another house which you believe to be empty, or if you see suspicious-looking people about, or if you see anything which arouses your suspicions, go quickly to the nearest telephone or police box and ring up the police. If it is a dial telephone ring 99 or operator. If there is no dial ask for police. Police cars are at all stations. Others equipped with wireless receiving sets patrol the streets day and night waiting for messages."

"999" messages are to Scotland Yard, which instantly relays them to appropriate local police stations or to all of them if necessary, and to patrolling cars."

In the London Metropolitan area there are 5,000 housebreakings each year which are classed as preventable.

TRAINING THE HORSES

Writing of the police—the horses of the London police are pretty busy just now because of the various public functions and shows, such, for instance, as the International Horse Show, in which they have in various ways to take part.

The training which the police horses have to undergo before they are allowed to mix with London's traffic is a very rigorous one. At Imber Court, their headquarters, some few miles out of London, all sorts of gadgets have been assembled in order to make things as realistic as possible, and even gramophones, amplified by loud speakers, are used during the course of training.

First of all, a new horse spends six weeks in the paddock where it has to go through training unmounted. This includes walking up and down stairs. Later, the horse has to do the same thing carrying a policeman mounted.

The riding school is fitted with huge mirrors, so that horses and their riders can see how they appear to others.

Another part of the horses' training includes the sniffing of newspapers—just to show there is no deception after they have been waved in front of them.

In order to get the animals used to dealing with human beings dummy figures are suspended from trees and horses have to wend their way between them. There are other dummies so constructed that they can be forced back by pushing and the horses are trained to do so.

Reproductions of sounds, such as the drone of an airplane, the firing of a revolver at close quarters, the blare of motor horns, the screeching of brakes suddenly applied are all used as items of training.

There is also used a method of accustoming horses to flames and smoke. First of all a little smouldering is started. As the horses get used to that a bigger one is used and this at last breaks into flames.

Not until the horses have been instilled with the qualities of patience, caution, discipline and endurance are they allowed to take up the work in London.

Subject: the proposed formation of a Women's Territorial Army and appeals for recruits.

Mr. R. C. Morrison, M.P.—Will the right honorable gentleman (Mr. Hore-Belisha, Minister of War), bear in mind that the local authorities are appealing to women to take part in air raid precautions work, and will he do his best to see that there is no duplication in the appeal which it is proposed to make?

Mr. Hore-Belisha (a bachelor)—Yes, sir, everyone is appealing to women, but every effort will be made to see that offers are used in the best possible direction.
